Transportation of the Army and its supplies: Transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops when moving either by land or water, and including also the transportation of recruits and recruiting parties heretofore paid from the appropriation for "Expenses for recruiting;" of supplies to the militia furnished by the War Department; of the necessary agents and employees; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster stores, from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draft and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other vessels and boats required for the transportation of troops and supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employees; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as trainmasters and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of funds of the Army; the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; for procuring water, and introducing the same to buildings, at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance, and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for constructing roads and wharves; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of the full amount of service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That in expending the money appropriated by this act a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States and which obtained a grant of public land to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated by the foregoing provision only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such troops and munitions of war and military supplies and property as the Secretary of War shall deem just and reasonable under the foregoing provision, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service, $25,000,000: Provided, That the balance of the appropriation of $100,000 made by the act of May 26, 1900, for construction of military roads and bridges in Alaska remaining unexpended on June 30, 1901, is hereby reappropriated and made available for such construction: Provided further, That the number of draft animals purchased from this appropriation, added to those now on hand, shall be limited to such numbers as are actually required for the service.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:
The Clerk read as follows:

On page 25, line 16, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "two."

Mr. HAY. The amendment which I offer makes the appropriation of this service read "twenty-two" instead of "twenty-five" millions of dollars. The committee will observe that on page 16 of the bill the officers and crews and employees of these transports are provided for in that particular clause. Now, after careful examination into this question of the transport service, there being only 22 transports, it seems to me that $22,000,000 is a sufficient sum to run this service. As it is run now, it is very expensive, and this appropriation ought to be cut down. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will look at page 16, he will see that the appropriation there is only for the subsistence of the crews that he speaks of. I want to say to the committee that last year it cost about $35,000,000 for this transport service. The estimates this year were $30,000,000, and the committee cut the estimate down $5,000,000, appropriating $25,000,000 for this year. The Quartermaster-General said the item should not be reduced below $28,000,000; and we ought not to cut one penny below the amount in this bill. There is danger of having a small deficiency at the next session of Congress even with this appropriation of $25,000,000. Now, with reference to this service being extraordinarily expensive to the Government, it has cost the Government less than one-half of what it would have cost the Government to transport these troops back and forth, if they had used the regular means of travel instead of owning their own transports.

Mr. HAY. They had to buy the transports, had they not?

Mr. HULL. The Government owns all the transports it uses.

Mr. HAY. I know they do.

Mr. HULL. But when they needed more than they owned and chartered a boat the chartered boat cost a great deal less than to use commercial lines. It seems to me that my friend is offering an amendment here which would simply either cripple the service or demand at the next session of Congress that the Committee on Appropriations shall take the matter up and report a deficiency.

Mr. HAY. Was there not a deficiency on the last appropriation?

Mr. HULL. I believe that $25,000,000 is the least sum that we ought to appropriate at this session.

Mr. HAY. Was there not a deficiency the last appropriation?

Mr. HULL. We appropriated $34,000,000, and in the last bill there was no deficiency.

Mr. HAY. I think the Quartermaster-General said that he had more than he needed.

Mr. HULL. If you will read the hearings you will see that he reported we ought to appropriate more than $25,000,000.

Mr. HAY. I understand that he said he could cut it down $2,000,000.

Mr. HULL. He said he could cut it down $2,000,000, and the committee cut it down $5,000,000.

Mr. HAY. But we are not transporting as many troops as heretofore.

Mr. HULL. But we are transporting all the time.

Mr. HAY. I understand we are.

Mr. HULL. We are going to transport all the time, and we have cut off $5,000,000 by the committee below the estimates submitted to Congress, and it seems to me that $5,000,000 is a pretty big cut, in view of what the Quartermaster-General says, and we ought not to cut it down another three millions. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I believe in my country's progress; I believe in advancement, and in doing all that is possible to aid in its material growth, and in making the lives of my fellow-beings happier and better.

I am not an alarmist. I believe in justice and equality, and I have faith in the common sense and loyalty of the people, and from this belief and faith I am confident that the people throughout the length and breadth of the country will sanction votes cast for general public improvements, but I am equally confident that they will be quick to condemn the unpatriotic schemes presented here, which are leading our country farther and farther away from the principles of loyal devotion and adherence to the ideas upon which this Republic was built.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem that the leaders of the Administration party have forgotten the precepts taught by our fathers; that they deliberately set out to ignore the grand heritage handed down to us by those who have gone before, that this is the "land of the noble free;" that independence and the right of the people to govern themselves are sacred principles. The air we breathe instills devotion to freedom and right, and the doctrine of the "divine right of kings" finds no lodgment in the heart of any true American.

Republican party leaders on the stump during every campaign, when appealing to the voters of the land, either are blatant-mouthed jingoists, for the occasion, or avoid the subject as a pestilence and a plague. I have no doubt but that the great heart of the American people beats in unison with every impulse of freedom, every longing for independence that fills the heart of every oppressed people on the globe, and if left free to carry out the noble thoughts, desires, and intentions of their nature they would join in some movement whose widening circles and swelling crest would reach to the earth's remotest bounds and extend the benedictions of liberty and peace to all of the world's oppressed.

The United States of America should stand at the head and lead in this glorious crusade of freedom as the evangel of liberty; but unfortunately her limbs have been fettered by those in power, who have sought personal ends at the expense of the country's shame.

For years in our history the Fourth of July meant something to our people. It was celebrated as a reminder of the foundation of our independence and greatness. In every hamlet and village celebrations were held, eloquent speakers portrayed the growth and glory of the country, and, in common phrase, "twisted the Lion's tail," and I have no doubt but that there are many of my Republican friends here who have been the eloquent "orator" on such an occasion and have denounced England's aggression; but such celebrations have fallen into disuse, and the stern sense of opposition to British schemes has grown less or been crowded into the background by self-interest or overcome by the glitter of British gold.

If we were true to our real convictions and should speak out our honest sentiments as American citizens, we would espouse the cause of the struggling Boers, and our voice would be heard in thunder tones demanding that the South African republics shall remain as such, and not be destroyed at the behest of the cupidity and greed of the brutal Briton.

The sturdy burghers are fighting for their very existence; and, though their numbers are comparatively small, the ferocity of British authorities has given to them a long list of heroic martyrs, whose memories are to the struggling Boers an inspiration that makes each one an host.

The Boers are fighting to maintain their existence as a separate government under a republican form. The British, under pretense of holding a suzerainty over their territory, just as the British claimed a suzerainty over the United States, are fighting to destroy the independence of the Dutch republics, and, mainly, to steal the gold and diamonds of the country.

Any intelligent and unbiased person in looking over the situation, comparing the history of the United States and England with the history of the Boers and England, would say that at the very first rifle shot fired by English ruffians at the Boers this Government would at once leap to the defense and rescue of her sister republic and say to the Imperial British Government, "Stop, we will never consent or permit such wrong. It is our mission to aid in the advance of liberty and freedom and in the building up of independent republics wherever they exist, and, 'by the Eternal,' we will do it."

Have we done this? No, no; speak it to our shame! We have not only sit by and watched the "robber nation" violate all the rules of civilized warfare in its war against the Boers, protesting neutrality, we have permitted the English to draw from our country their military supplies.

So "commercialized" is the patriotic spirit of the Administration leaders that the 150,000 horses and mules that have been purchased in this country and shipped to Cape Colony for the use of the British army are a more potent influence than all ideas of patriotism, humanity, justice, and right.

This Administration can not receive "officially" the duly authenticated representatives of the South African Republics or listen to an appeal for peace, but it can use all the power and force of the Government to guard and protect the British mules near New Orleans. I wonder that such obsequent subservency to a foreign foe, for that is what England is and ever has been to us, does not arouse the shade of old "Sam" Houston and his band of brave patriots from their graves and incite them to sweep the whole beggarly crew from America's shores.

Reason, justice, patriotism, humanity, all the memories of our past, all the hopes, aspirations, and desires of a freeborn people, prompt us to intervene in behalf of the Boers. Why do we not? Why?

It is time that we should. The horrors of war are darkening the brightness of the twentieth century dawn. The Boers are fighting for justice and the maintenance of their independence, and the spirit of independence, when once aroused, is seldom extinguished, save by the utter annihilation of every man, woman, and child of the race. Why do we not act favorably to these struggling heroes? Ah, since we have launched our destiny on the same course as imperialistic England, since we have wandered so far away from the principles upon which our Republic was founded, since we, too, as a nation are equally guilty of the same crimes against liberty, honor, and justice, for very shame's sake we can not speak a word or lift a finger in behalf of South Africa, or England would simply point to the Philippines and say, "Physician, heal thyself."

This is the answer to the question why we do not take some action to bring peace to the stricken South Africans and relieve them from the savage tortures of savage British soldiers. Let us take a survey of our surroundings, for it is high time we took our bearings and found out where we stand. We have drifted from landmark after landmark and are sailing over seas where many a ship of state has foundered.

It was the idea of the fathers that this should be a representative government, with three coordinate branches—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. For a century this system was on trial, as an experiment and as an assured fact, a success; but ambition and organized greed crept in, and by shrewd manipulation the executive encroached more and more upon the rights of the other branches, which tamely submitted, until now both are subordinate—in fact, if not in theory—to the executive.

Mr. Chairman, this ought not to be. No matter who occupies the Presidential chair, he is there but to execute the laws passed by Congress, and it is beneath the dignity of any legislature to follow the beck and nod of any President, irregardless of what his wishes may be. If the wishes of the people were carried out and political chicanery dropped, there might come to us such a condition that our skirts would be clean enough to permit us to speak a word for the Boers, but as long as we maintain our present condition we can not with consistency advocate any course which demands honor, patriotism, and humanity. So bound is the Government to scheming ringleaders that there is no consistency anywhere in the legislation sought to be enacted. No established rule of honor or duty is maintained. Right in Porto Rico is wrong in the States. We have one standard of dealing with Cuba, another with the Philippines, and still others, different with each subject, the only agreement being in complete deference to the trusts.

To-day war exists in our Eastern possessions—our colonies, our dependencies, our provinces—no one knows just how to describe the Philippines. But we are engaged in a brutalizing warfare there that in some ways may be compared to the conduct of the war in South Africa.

There is no question of patriotism or loyalty to the Republic involved in this war. It is simply a war of aggression and conquest. Our honor, our homes, our rights have not been assailed by any of the foes we are fighting.

They are fighting for their liberty and independence, and we are fighting for their homes and their subjection to our domination. They have made a brave, even if hopeless, struggle, but are not as yet conquered or subdued. But how great the cost to us, not alone in money but in shame and sorrow!

It is still to continue, and we will be having repetitions of the scenes described in a press dispatch from Omaha, which I will read. We have had many a ship load of confined forms brought home, and many a load like these, all part of the price paid by the nation for its crimes and for the trampling underfoot of the principles of Independence Day.

OMAHA, March 15, 1902.

A carload of maniacs brought in from the West to-day caused commotion at the Union station. The men were United States soldiers who had gone insane in the Philippines. All were absolutely mad and violent. All wore leg irons and handcuffs. Some were in strait-jackets and were bound to isolated parts of the car.

There were 18 maniacs in all. The guards and care takers were soldiers. They were stationed at the doors of the car and at intervals along it with clubbed rifles.

As the train pulled into the station there was a confused sound as of a menagerie approaching. The imprisoned men were chattering, snarling, growling, moaning, roaring, and whining like so many wild beasts. Each seemed to imagine himself some representative of the animal kingdom, and the result was terrifying and heartrending.

The maniacs are being taken to the Insane Soldiers' Hospital at Washington.

The course of the Administration can not be defended upon any moral or religious ground. It is only upon the assumption that "might makes right," and that the "almighty dollar" is in it, that the advocates of the continuance of the present policy can stand.

We hear a great deal about the large sums we are expending for the education of the natives over there, but whose money is it that we are spending? It is money that is collected there and belongs to the revenues of the islands; it is not our money; and for every teacher, preacher, Bible, or text-book we send over to those "poor heathen" we send a whole shipload of whisky and beer.

We hung on to the islands as an after conclusion. When Dewey captured the Spanish fleet and, with Aguinaldo's aid, took possession of Manila, there was no thought on the part of this Government to retain anything more than the harbor at Manila, but when the word came that the forests were valuable, that rich beds of minerals could be found, and that there were opportunities for big stealings, then the greedy cormorants of monopoly here in the States declared that they must have a show, and they have had it.

I hope they may soon get satisfied, and the only way to reach them is through the pocket. Have the Philippines paid for all the vast expenditures necessary in remaining on the islands and maintaining our present hold? Has it paid in dollars and cents, and say nothing of the loss of honor, life, health, and reason that as a nation and as individuals we have suffered? Is the game worth the candle? In the report of the Secretary of War for 1901 the imports to the Philippine Islands for 1901 were as follows:

Great Britain	$3,956,145
United States	2,855,685
Spain	2,161,352
Germany	2,135,252
France	1,683,929
China	4,339,941
Hongkong	2,340,585
East Indies	2,182,802
All other countries	5,623,025
Total	30,279,406

The exports were:

Great Britain	$10,704,741
United States	2,572,021
Other countries	9,938,186
Total	23,214,948

Now, a large part of the imports were for goods for our own soldiers there, so that it was not legitimate trade of the islands. For this paltry $2,855,685 of commerce that went from the United States, we paid out over $100,000,000. How long will this be kept up? The independence of the Philippines is the only solution. With the people and the Democratic party rests their only hope, and not alone their hope, but the hope for the perpetuity of this Republic. The Republican party has had in its past some great leaders, men whose clear intellect, rugged honesty, and uprightness of character made them leaders, and at the inception and early days of the party these leaders enunciated the principles of the party with a vigor that was unmistakable. Compare the words of Lincoln, when he said:

These arguments that are made that the inferior races are to be treated with as much allowance as they are capable of enjoying; that as much is to be done as their condition will allow—what are these arguments? They are the arguments that kings have made for enslaving the people in all ages of the world. You will find that all the arguments in favor of kingscraft were of this class: that they always bestrode the necks of the people, not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden. Turn it whatever way you will; whether it comes from the mouth of a king, an excuse for enslaving the people of the country, or from the mouth of men of one race for enslaving the men of another, it is all the same old serpent.

Or that resolution adopted by the Republicans in convention assembled in 1860:

That the maintenance of the principles promulgated in the Declaration of Independence, that governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, is essential to the preservation of our republican institutions.

Compare, I urge, this language, these sentiments, with that of the leaders to-day, who boldly advocate forcible annexation and declare "We have the Philippines and we are going to keep them forever." Like Pharaoh of old they have hardened their hearts, and it may be necessary for a holocaust, such as the death of all the firstborn in the land, to bring them to hear reason. It is not because there is no remedy for present conditions in the Philippine Islands that no action is taken. It is because of the opportunity given for favored officials on high salaries, for pet contractors who reap fortunes from their dealings with the Government, for syndicates and rings to get hold of valuable properties. These are the main reasons. The dollar is their god and man but a slave. As long as there is this sickening subserviency to greed there will be a demand for our brave boys to be thrown as victims to disease of body and mind, to wounds, torture, and death, in a war which has degenerated to a level with the war in South Africa, for the Philippine natives are struggling for their freedom now, as they have been for over three hundred years, and we have but taken the place of the Spaniards.

If Congress should pass resolution or the President issue proclamation that it was the intention of the United States within a year or two years, or even five years, to grant to the Filipinos an independent government, without any humiliating conditions, the native combatants would quietly seek their homes as soon as the news could reach them and at once begin the preparation for their independent statehood and take up the rebuilding of their properties, and would concede to us such naval stations and trade concessions as would in a shorter time than can ever be under our dominion of the isles reimburse us for the money we paid to Spain for their purchase. Our Republican friends, however, are having trouble all along the line. Take Cuba as another illustration. Forced by the demand of the people, we, in the name of humanity, delivered Cuba from Spanish bondage, and then, at the suggestion of the trusts, we saddled the island with a military and a carpetbag government. We saved them from murder, but left them to starve while the Rathbones and Neelys plundered the revenues.

We pledged ourselves to make it a stable government, and we so hedge it about with conditions that it is impossible for the island to develop its resources. Foreign capital was timid, as capital always is, and has kept out of Cuba while we haggled over the political disposition of the Cuban question, and now the principal industry of the island is paralyzed by our neglect.

During our occupation of the island the sugar trust secured control of many plantations, and with changed conditions they now make their demands on Congress.

I have been opposed to a protective tariff, as such, and I would be glad to wipe out the tariff on sugar, but I also want to be equally kind to tea, to tobacco, to iron, steel, hides, and wood pulp.

I realize that the Republican leaders are in a state of mind over this Cuban question, and afraid of its outcome. They realize that there is boundless sympathy for the Cuban people in the hearts of the American people; that Cuba has untold wealth of natural resources and raw material, and if we treat them justly, and as they have the right to expect under the conditions in which we have placed them, in a very short period of time we will have an annual trade with them of hundreds of millions; but, like Demetrius of Ephesus, they cry, "Our craft is in danger," and great is their confusion.

The tariff is the fetich upheld by the trusts, and before which the Republicans bow themselves.

A Democratic standard bearer once tritely said that "the tariff is a local issue," and he was assailed and ridiculed by the opposition leaders and press for the saying, and yet each different section and locality of this country, each separate industry, has separate wants and interests to be conserved, and every tariff that has ever been made has been the result of compromises, and only satisfactory to the interests which get the most favorable consideration.

I receive from many of my Republican constituents appeals to have hides placed on the free list, because it is for the interest of leather workers to have the tariff reduced. The great newspapers of the country, Republican journals as well as others, are in distress, and beg, demand, and threaten that wood pulp must be admitted free, and so it goes all along the line.

Cuba comes and begs of us for relief, and humanity dictates that we heed her cry.

I read one of many letters I have received from Cubans:

HABANA, February 12, 1902.

HON. JAMES A. NORTON,

Member of the United States Congress, The Raleigh, Washington.

DEAR SIR: We would earnestly request you to carefully read and think over the contents of this letter, as a nation's prosperity or ruin depends on the way in which the matter herein touched on is settled.

After three years of a civil war of the most destructive character we find ourselves with all our capital invested in the reconstruction of the country, chiefly in the building up again of our two great industries, sugar and tobacco. At the commencement of the present grinding season, or, say, the harvesting of our sugar, we find ourselves with a prospective crop of fully 800,000 tons of sugar, the market price for which, duty included, in our actual market is so much below the cost to us of producing same that unless immediate measures are taken by the American Congress to give us some relief in the way of a reduction in the duties our sugar and tobacco pay on entering the United States absolute ruin stares us in the face.

This crisis in our affairs reaches every person in the island of Cuba, whether planter, banker, business man, or whatever he may be, and unless the reduction comes to us within the present month, that its benefits may reach the crop we are in these moments commencing to harvest, our conditions will be worse than ever before in this island.

It is a well-known fact that every civil war Cuba has had has been, more than anything else, due to economic reasons. The best-informed people on the island consider that the economical crisis which now overshadows us is the most serious in our history.

Unless you wish to see a people ruined and anarchy reign at the very doors of the United States, and as a direct result of her intervention for the saving of said people, we most earnestly beg and implore you to use all your well-known and powerful influence that the reduction we ask for on our sugar and tobacco may be granted us within the course of the present month; for, believe us, it is a matter of life and death for the island of Cuba, and the evils which threaten us unless this reduction is conceded we dare not think of. A failure in the present crop possibly means a complete wiping out of the existing business interests in the island of Cuba.

Respectfully, yours,

ANSELMO CASSELLS.

The fight is not so much upon giving relief, but as to the details. As sugar is the chief export from Cuba, anything that will help that industry will aid the development of the islands, and from the hearings had before the Ways and Means Committee it would seem that the removal of the differential duty, or that corresponding to color restriction, upon Cuban unrefined sugars imported into the United States would produce this result. I am in favor of this, as far as it goes. I want to help the people of Cuba to the fullest extent, not in any halfway degree; but I want the people of my own country benefited first, and I find in the evidence before the committee this statement:

Should Congress deem it advisable to make a reasonable reduction on raw sugars from Cuba, we, as beet-sugar manufacturers, can stand such a reduction on such tariff, and still, with such decreased duties, feel assured of a legitimate profit on the actual money investment.

But, while Cuba comes asking for relief, there are selfish interests here, represented by the sugar trust, which contend against this full measure of relief and join with the Administration in a policy which by making use of the necessities of Cuba will lead to forcible annexation through the medium of starvation.

Now, while it may or may not be desirable to have Cuba annexed to the Union and add another problem to our existence as a Republic, I do not believe it wisdom or good policy or anything less than a crime to add even the "Gem of the Antilles" to the galaxy of States until it comes freely, willingly, and of the own volition of the people thereof.

We are here to legislate for the people of the United States, and in all things we should be most jealous of the interests of all the people. We should not cater or defer to one class or industry, but so act that the beneficent influence and result of our legislation will fall alike upon rich and poor, capital and labor, everywhere within our borders.

If legislation be enacted in behalf of or against sugar, then bring within the same treatment tobacco, corn, wheat, cotton, lumber, iron, steel, and all the products of our country.

If the steel industry is favored, then extend the same privileges to the farmer.

If the members of a syndicate owning great steamship lines are to receive millions in the way of subsidy, then scatter millions more among the workingmen of the country. If you are going to open the vaults of the Treasury to a few, why not throw wide the doors and give all a chance to go in and steal what they choose?

You all know that this is not a land of equal opportunities, no matter how loudly, for campaign purposes only, you prate about the glorious Republic of equality. Look at the vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few, not gathered by honest industry, but by favored legislation! See how they continue to be favored! Now, it is the duty of the Democratic party to be true to its principles and fight for the restoration to the people of their common heritage to be free and equal and to have equal opportunity with syndicate and trust in the benefits of legislation.

There is coming before us soon the ship-subsidy bill, which, by its provisions, is a gift, pure and simple. Under its first title the Postmaster-General can make contracts with owners of certain vessels for the carrying of the mail, and for such service the Government is bound to pay, not in proportion to the amount of mail carried, but a rate based on the gross tonnage and distance sailed by the vessels. Then, again, there is a general subsidy to freight vessels, and here the bounty is not confined to amount of freight carried, but is governed by the capacity of the vessel and the sailing distance. Again, there is a gift outright to those engaged in deep-sea fishing which has been estimated to only reach $175,000 a year, and it would not be necessary for a single fish to be caught under the provisions of the bill. It is a most vicious bill. I read the provisions as to payment:

SEC. 5. The rate of compensation for such ocean mail service, to be paid per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed from the port of clearance in the United States to the port of entry in the United States, according to the route required by the Post-Office Department, shall not exceed the following:

Steamships of the first class, 2.7 cents.
Steamships of the second class, 2.5 cents.
Steamships of the third class, 2.3 cents.
Steamships of the fourth class, 2.1 cents.
Steamships of the fifth class, 1.9 cents.
Steamships of the sixth class, 1.7 cents.
Steamships of the seventh class, 1.5 cents.

The rates of compensation to a steamship to be employed in carrying the mails to a foreign port in North America under any contract hereafter to be made under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 70 per cent of the maximum rates established by this section: Provided, That in the case of failure from any cause to perform the regular voyages stipulated for in said contracts, or any of them, a pro rata deduction shall be made from the compensation on account of such omitted voyage or voyages, and that suitable fines and penalties may be imposed for delays or irregularities in the due performance of service according to the contract, to be determined by the Postmaster-General: And provided further, That until July 1, 1907, not more than $5,000,000 shall be expended in any one year under the contracts provided for in this title, and after that date not more than $8,000,000 shall be expended in any one year under the contracts provided for in this title; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such regulations for the payment of said compensation as will cause any excess in the total amount of compensation earned under this title in any one fiscal year over and above said sums respectively to be deducted pro rata from the total compensation due each person or corporation under this title during said fiscal year.

GENERAL SUBSIDY.

SEC. 6. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1902, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, subject to the provisions of this title, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owner or owners of any vessel hereafter built and registered in the United States or now duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States (including as such citizens any corporation created under the laws of the United States or any of the States thereof), and being at the time of entry engaged in the foreign trade of the United States, which shall be entered in the United States from a foreign port or from any port in the Philippine Islands, compensation as hereinafter provided, that is to say:

(a) On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, of a sail or steam vessel of over 1,000 gross registered tons, 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed.

(b) On each entry, not exceeding 16 entries in any one fiscal year, and for a period of five years from the date of registration of a vessel of over 1,000 gross registered tons, which shall be completed and registered after the passage of this act, one-fourth of 1 cent per gross registered ton for each 100 nautical miles sailed, in addition to the compensation provided in paragraph (a).

SEC. 7. That compensation under this title shall not be allowed in respect of any of the following-named vessels:

(a) A vessel on a voyage extending only to a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her last port of departure in the United States or from a foreign port less than 150 nautical miles from her first port of arrival in the United States.

(b) A vessel on a voyage less than one-half of the whole length of which, on her outward and homeward voyages, respectively, shall have been on the sea between a port of the United States and a foreign port.

(c) A vessel which shall not be at least of the Class A1, as classified either by the Record of American and Foreign Shipping or the United States Standard Owners, Builders, and Underwriters' Association, or equivalent classification in any other register of shipping of at least equal merit.

(d) A vessel of which less than one-fourth of the crew shall be citizens of the United States or such persons as shall be within the provisions of section 2174 of the Revised Statutes.

(e) A barge, canal boat, or vessel proceeding from port to port in tow, or a tugboat, or a vessel engaged in wrecking.

(f) A foreign-built vessel, hereafter admitted to American registry pursuant to the provisions of section 4136 of the Revised Statutes.

(g) A vessel while employed in the coasting trade.

(h) Steamers which during their trials have not obtained a minimum speed of 8 knots, half loaded.

SEC. 8. That the mileage upon which compensation shall be paid under this title shall be determined by the direct customary route from the last port of departure in the United States to a foreign port or a port in the Philippine Islands, and from such last-mentioned port by the direct customary route to the first port of arrival in the United States. If during the voyage the vessel shall enter at two or more foreign ports or ports in the Philippine Islands, the distance by the direct customary route between such ports shall also be included in the mileage upon which compensation shall be paid under this title.

DEEP-SEA FISHERIES.

SEC. 12. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1902, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, bounties as follows:

(a) To the owner or owners of a documented vessel of the United States engaged in the deep-sea fisheries for at least three months in any one fiscal year, $2 per gross ton per annum: Provided, That at least one-third of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, or such persons as shall be within the provisions of section 2174 of the Revised Statutes.

(b) To a citizen of the United States serving as a member of a necessary and proper crew of a vessel of the United States documented and engaged in deep-sea fisheries for at least three months during any one fiscal year, $1 per month during the time necessarily employed in the voyages of such vessel.

Now, this bill is lauded to the skies by its framers as a great help to our merchant marine, and that it will promote shipbuilding in American shipyards; that in a few years all the carrying trade of the seas will be in American-built and American-owned vessels.

Let us lay aside the fact that the father of the bill is one of the large beneficiaries under the bill, and see, if we can, wherein our merchant marine will gain.

The provisions of the bill do not apply to our coasting trade, nor to commerce on the lakes and rivers of our country; only to those vessels engaged in the foreign trade. The amount to be expended is in a measure limited, and there are now more than enough vessels owned by the favored corporation to use up the entire appropriation, so what encouragement is there for the building of new ships under this law?

The shipyards of the country are not lacking in orders. Many of them are declining to accept new business by reason of the amount of business they now have on hand. It is true that a large share of our commerce with prosperous foreign countries is carried in foreign-built, foreign-owned, and foreign-manned vessels, but how that can justify or argue that we should take money out of the Government Treasury and give it to one class of people for absolutely no service rendered and compel the rest of the people to contribute to the fund by taxation is certainly a hard proposition to digest.

If the merchant marine can not maintain itself and a paternal Government must rush to its assistance, then, in all justice and fair play, apply the same principle to other industries. The farmers are not prosperous, so every time they drive to town pay them 10 cents a pound for all their whole outfit weighs over a ton for each three miles traveled. Now, would not such a proposition build up and promote agriculture?

Do you not think the farmers would then build better roads, buy larger and heavier wagons, and raise more heavy draft horses? Why, of course they would.

The laboring men are not in a flourishing financial condition. Shall we not give them a compensation of 30 cents for each tool they may have in their hands per hour? Would there not soon be an increased production of tools, a cessation of all eight-hour day agitation, and the workingmen prospering everywhere?

Where is there more right and justice in giving shipowners a subsidy than in giving the farmer and workingman?

What justice is there in paying the boat owners and the crews on boats which engage in deep-sea fishing a subsidy and ignore the fishermen on the lakes?

The whole scheme is one by which a few of the great shipowners who have already formed a trust may draw still more from the nation's Treasury.

This unjust discrimination in favor of one class of our citizens ought not to be. I believe that laws should be general in their application, and not so hedged about with restrictions as to benefit but a favored few.

It is the same way with the Chinese-exclusion law. I do not favor the exclusion of Chinese laborers alone. I do not believe that the United States should bar out the coolies of China from the "Golden Gate" and give entrance through the "Narrows" to the paupers, the ignorant, the vicious, and criminal from the slums of every other country on the globe. I am no advocate of cheap labor. Cheap labor and contract labor are ever to be deprecated, as they are next to slavery. History, experience, and observation teach us that the best-paid labor is the most economical and produces the best results. It does more and better work. It makes better citizens. So let us broaden the restrictions of our immigration laws and shut out every element that will tend to lower our standard of citizenship.

I am in favor of home protection. Not the protection taught by Republican leaders, which would shut out the products of the "pauper labor" of Europe, but bring the pauper laborers in by the thousands to take the places of American workmen, and then shoot them down like dogs when they are starving under the meager pittance paid them and ask for more.

This leads me to speak of a breed of humans who have been brought to this country and nursed by Republican practices and Republican precepts—the anarchists.

When on that fair autumnal day in September last, like a lightning sheet from a clear sky, there flashed the news that William McKinley had been slain, a whole world paid tribute of love, sorrow, and appreciation. Here in his own country the whole nation mourned, party lines were obliterated, partisan feeling was forgotten, and under the dark cloud of our nation's disaster from every heart there welled up the most profound sympathy and grief, while all united in condemnation of the hideous crime. All parties have joined in approval of the merited punishment which was given to the spawn of hell in whose base heart that monstrous crime had its birth.

There was insistent demand everywhere that without delay Congress should legislate against "anarchy," and many good people were so exercised that the most anarchistic suggestions were made as to the form legislation should take.

Almost four months have passed since we opened this session, and the "anarchists" are still undisturbed.

The Republican party is responsible for what is done and for that which is not done here. Your acts in the past have created the conditions which breed anarchy, and you can not escape the responsibility involved in such breeding. Your high protective tariff, which engendered trusts; the importation of pauper foreign labor by the beneficiaries of your legislation, your government by injunction, the infamous "bull pen," the brutal murders at Latimer, the assassination of Goebel in Kentucky, and the protection of the instigator and hoped-for beneficiary of the murder by the Republican governor of an adjacent State, all these are the hotbeds and inspiration of anarchy. The disregard of the Constitution and subversion of equal rights and justice, the triumph of the Navy ring, and a score or more acts of autocratic misrule, all have developed anarchy.

This land of ours may suffer for a time by the sporadic growth of anarchy under the favoring shelter of Republican Administration, but it will not last. The people of this nation are always stronger than the officeholders; they are patient and enduring up to a certain point, and then they render summary justice upon the offenders, and it is to the people we must look for help, and they have never failed. Their courage and bravery has been shown on many a battlefield, their patriotism and devotion attested by a century's history, and although, while corporations control the Government and imperialism casts its dark shadow over society, a dangerous and rebellious spirit will spread throughout the land, yet the time will come when the people will demand in thunder tones that can not be ignored that class privileges must be abolished and the principles of equality and equal rights to all be established once more as the foundation wall and capstone of the temple of liberty in this nation.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a few minutes ago ought to impress the members of this House and the country at large with the fact that this Government is bound to be at an enormous expense in holding the Philippine Islands. He stated that the appropriation of two years ago for transportation to the Philippines was $35,000,000 and that last year it was $30,000,000.

Mr. HULL. Thirty-four millions.

Mr. PARKER. This is not for the transport service, but for transportation in general.

Mr. HULL. For transportation and supplies everywhere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I understand that, but most of it is for the transport service. It shows the enormous amount it is costing us to transport soldiers from one part of the country to another for embarkation and in sending them to and from the Philippine Islands. Four-fifths of this appropriation is necessitated by our occupation of the archipelago.

I want to call attention to the fact that the appropriation in this bill for that service is $25,000,000—an enormous amount. According to the report of the Committee on Military Affairs the amount appropriated for subsistence of the enlisted soldiers is $11,934,000 and for the pay of the soldiers is $12,402,000. In other words, the cost of transportation is such a large item that it exceeds the pay and the subsistence of the enlisted men.

Mr. Chairman, what I desire to call attention particularly to in this paragraph is that the cost of the Army in the Philippine Islands is enormous compared to the cost of the Army in the United States. Of the $90,000,000 appropriated in this bill for the military establishment of the United States, I have no doubt that two-thirds of it is for the maintenance of the soldiers in the Philippine Islands. In other words, we are appropriating $60,000,000 a year in order to hold the Philippine Islands—$60,000,000 annually to sustain by force our sovereignty there!

Mr. Chairman, when we look at these figures we naturally inquire how are we ever going to get even on this enterprise of conquest and subjugation. If we could wipe out the past expenditures of $300,000,000 and start anew, we could never get even on this great blunder of the American people. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War in his annual report made a statement with respect to the commerce of the Philippine Islands which, it seems to me, ought to convince anybody that even if we have peace, even if we reduce the force to 15,000 men in the archipelago, there will still be an expenditure of more than $20 for every dollar of profit made to our commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a table in the last annual report of the Secretary of War, which to my mind is the strongest argument from the commercial standpoint against holding the Philippine Islands that ever has been made. It shows that the total imports of the Philippine Islands for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, aggregated $30,000,000, and of that amount the United States exported to the Philippine Islands only $2,855,685.

It is generally asserted that the exporter of goods is doing exceedingly well if he makes 10 per cent profit on his exports. Ten per cent of that amount is only $285,000. That, then, is the sum which the exporters from the United States make on the goods sold in the Philippine Islands in a whole year.

Mr. Chairman, we have been in possession of and the flag of our country has floated over the archipelago for nearly four years, and yet we find that we have not received 10 per cent of the total commerce of the islands. We have heard of the argument that trade follows the flag; we have heard it stated that if we planted colonies we could get their trade; and yet we have been in possession of the islands, with all the advantages in our favor, and we have captured not quite one-tenth of the commerce of the same.

Yea, more. We find that the demand for the American goods we send is made largely by our own soldiers there. If that demand were eliminated we would not have one-twentieth part of the commerce of the islands.

Mr. Chairman, the Filipinos are like other people; they buy where they can buy cheapest, and they sell where they can sell dearest. In this very table is an item that Spain, hated Spain, shipped to the Philippine Islands during the past year almost as many goods as did the United States—$2,182,000 worth of goods—and yet they tell us that the trade follows the flag.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Colorado be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, we find that the Philippine people purchase from the very country they had been in rebellion against for a generation almost as many goods as they purchase from the people of the United States.

There is another statement contained in this report of the Secretary of War which every person ought to take and consider seriously in connection with the Philippine problem. It is shown by this report that although the United States commerce with the islands has increased somewhat, yet certain other nations have been increasing their commerce with the archipelago more than the United States. That statement demonstrates that trade does not follow the flag, but does follow the price list.

Now, what is that statement? The Secretary of War, on page 77 of the report, says:

The imports from the United Kingdom, from Germany, from France, and from the British East Indies have increased in greater proportion than the imports from the United States.

Think of it! With our Army there, with all the natural tendencies that our soldiers have to buy American goods, with everything in our favor, with the flag floating from all the ports of the archipelago, yet the Secretary of War admits, in language that can have but one construction, that the imports from the United Kingdom of Great Britain, from Germany, France, and from the British East Indies have increased in greater proportion than the imports from our own country.

Mr. Chairman, is it possible that anyone can contend that "trade follows the flag," in view of that declaration of the Secretary of War? Gentlemen say that the trade will increase. It may increase; it may double, treble, or quadruple. It may increase tenfold. And yet, according to the extent of our expenditures in the past and those that are bound to be made in the future, we will expend at least $20 out of the Treasury of the United States for every dollar of profit to our exporters of goods.

And who gets the profit? Mr. Chairman, it is not the Government. We do not get the profit. It is not even the people who get the profit. It is only one class of the people. The exporter alone gets the profit which is made upon the goods. That paltry $285,000 is what all the exporters of the United States get in profits. But who pays the $60,000,000 which we are appropriating in this bill? It is the people—the taxpayers. How long are the people of this country going to consent to pay $60,000,000 a year out of their earnings for the purpose of maintaining a commerce in which there is a profit of only $285,000 a year?

But suppose that commerce should increase a thousand per cent. That would be an extraordinary increase—not to be looked for—perhaps never to be attained; for you must remember that notwithstanding the reputation of having phenomenally increased our commerce, it took the United States more than twenty years to even double our exports. The exports of the United States for the year 1880 were $835,000,000; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, they were $1,487,000,000. Our exports have not quite doubled in twenty-one years. Yet it was the pride of every American that we had extended our commerce more rapidly than any other great nation of the world.

But, Mr. Chairman, assuming the exports from our country to the Philippine Islands will grow ten times faster than our commerce with the rest of the world has grown, yet for our yearly expenditure of $60,000,000 our exporters will derive a profit of only $2,850,000 per annum. That is, the Government will expend out of money collected from the people $20 for every dollar of profit to our exporters of goods. If the expenditures be cut down one-half, which is not probable in this generation, yet the Government expense will be ten times the profit to commerce. What an idiotic policy, even from the commercial standpoint, it is to hold the Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult to determine what is the attitude of the Democratic party in respect to our Philippine policy.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman tell us what is the attitude of the Republican party in regard to the Philippine Islands, or what policy that party has ever declared on that question?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the policy of the Republican party, as I understand it, is to do our duty there manfully and well.

Mr. COWHERD. Can not the gentleman decide what our duty is—whether we should give those people an independent government or hold them as colonies?

Mr. MONDELL. We are following our duty as we see it. We will continue to do so until the end.

Mr. COWHERD. Can not the gentleman tell us how he sees our duty?

Mr. MONDELL. I can if the gentleman will give me time.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], in a speech made here some time ago, suggested that while we could not with propriety hold the Philippine Islands, we might properly trade them off.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; the gentleman is mistaken. I never made any such statement. I was accused of it; but it was some one else upon this side—

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman took the ground that we might bargain away or "swap" the Philippines.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no. My contention was that the only solution of the problem was to treat the Philippines in exactly the same way we promised to treat the Cubans—to promise them their independence, and then after the establishment of a stable government give it to them.

Mr. MONDELL. I certainly understood the gentleman to say we might better trade or exchange the Philippines—

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; it was another gentleman on this side who said that; but the declaration never met with my approval, and when the gentleman from Iowa charged me with having made such a declaration I denied it. There is nothing in the RECORD to show that I ever said such a thing.

Mr. MONDELL. I am glad that my friend from Colorado did not say it—that it was some other gentleman on that side who said it.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The remark to which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] refers was made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He did not say that he wanted to trade off those islands. What he did say was that it would be better to trade them off than hold them as colonies.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, if we have no right to hold the Philippines I do not understand how we can have any right to swap them off to some other nation for territory elsewhere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think we have.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Missouri yesterday declared himself opposed to our Philippine policy because, he said, it was a policy of conquest. The gentleman from Colorado but a moment ago was opposed to our Philippine policy because it does not promise to bring a large return in trade. On which proposition does that side of the Chamber stand? I suppose that if there was a prospect of a large increase in commerce with the Orient by reason of our holding the Philippines, the gentleman would admit that we were justified, or would suggest that we were justified.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I would not admit. I have discussed the question from the moral standpoint. You can not get up here on the floor of the House and in five minutes cover the moral, political, military, and commercial aspect, for the simple—

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman suggested that there was no large balance of trade coming our way because of our occupancy of the Philippine Islands, and therefore we were not justified in holding the Philippine Islands. Gentlemen on the other side have a very convenient memory. They seem to have forgotten that the Philippine policy was the first fruit of our intervention in Cuba; that even before we struck the first blow at the Gordian knot of Cuban captivity we had the Philippine policy on our hands by reason of Dewey's victory in Manila Bay; that we destroyed a government, and the destruction of that government laid upon us the duty of establishing a government in its stead. Would the gentleman have us shirk our responsibilities? Would the gentleman have had us leave the islands to domestic anarchy or to spoliation on the part of foreign powers, and sail away after we had destroyed the government which we found there at the time of the battle of Manila Bay? I hope not.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the gentleman what I think we ought to have done.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman has just made his speech, and I am making mine.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You ask me the question, and if you do not care to have me answer it, very well.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the gentleman asked what was the Republican policy in the Philippine Islands. I certainly can not speak for all of the gentlemen on this side, or for the party of which I am a member, but as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, our policy in the Philippine Islands is the policy of performing our whole duty.

I know that the opposition, with their ear to the ground to catch any faint rumblings of popular discontent with the form or result of our policy in the Orient, with their eyes bent upon the East, not to discern by the dawn's early light whether our flag in triumph still waves over fair Luzon, but to find some excuse for criticising the policy which has planted it there, which may have some weight with the voter at the coming November election, or some pretext for pulling it down, have constantly sought to disassociate two phases of the same action—our intervention to save Cuba from Spain and the firm hand we have maintained to save all of the Filipino people from some of the Filipino people; to disconnect the cause—the war with Spain—in which they glory and for which they claim a large measure of credit, from the effect—our difficulties in the Philippines, from all responsibility for which they seek to absolve themselves.

I feel that it is almost an imposition upon this House to trace the continuity of events and the rapid march of incidents—thrilling, epoch marking, inspiring—which began with the decision of the American people for intervention in behalf of Cuba, carried our flag triumphant around the world, and planted our institutions in the heart of the Orient. But to judge from some of the speeches made on the other side one would imagine that decades, if not generations, had thrown a gulf of time unbridged by continuing and connecting events between the Spanish war and the pacification of the Philippines. So convenient have been their memories they seem to have been able to forget that the Philippines were the first fruits of the Cuban intervention; that Dewey's guns aroused us to a new duty and a tremendous responsibility there before the first blow had been struck directly at the Gordian knot of Cuban captivity.

To judge from the speeches made on that side of the Chamber one would imagine that the lapse of time had entirely obliterated from the memory of the opposition the fact that it was their acknowledged leader who drummed up votes enough in the United States Senate to ratify the treaty of Paris, and I am not surprised that the gentlemen are not anxious to recall this fact of history, challenging as it does the responsibility of their party for the inauguration of a policy which for partisan ends they now seek to criticise, and at the same time reminding them of the anything but patriotic motives which their "peerless" leader confessed actuated him in seeking to have the treaty ratified. Such is their present situation; and yet, casting a prophetic eye down the lane of time, I think I can see the day at no distant future when, forgetful of and ignoring the present attitude of the gentlemen on this floor who claim to represent the Democracy of the nation, when, denying in all probability the motives which their candidate and their leader admitted actuated him in seeking the ratification of the treaty—to embarrass a Republican Administration—they will place Mr. Bryan upon a pedestal beside the immortal Jefferson and laud him, not for his advocacy of the policies which carried Democracy to defeat in 1896 and 1900, but as the follower of Thomas Jefferson, who, like him, gave additional territory to freedom, a wider zone to American influence, and enlightenment by securing the ratification of the treaty which extended our sovereignty over the Philippines.

But, as I have said, that is the prophetic not the present view. To-day we have the spectacle of a party claiming all the credit of bringing on the war with Spain, claiming the major portion of the credit of planting the flag in Porto Rico and Santiago, while trying to pull it down in Luzon, preposterously insistent in claiming the lion's share of the credit of adopting the policy of forceful intervention, ridiculously pathetic in the turn-tale and scuttling policy advocated in dealing with the questions which intervention gave rise to, absolutely impotent and nerveless with regard to a definite policy for the future.

So far as we are concerned on this side of the Chamber, we can well afford to allow our Democratic friends to indulge to their limit the hallucinations that the American people will desert a policy strenuously pursued to a definite aim and purpose to follow the will-o'-the-wisp of nerveless vacillation and opaque uncertainty outlined by the Democratic party on this floor. We may well rest content while they seek to allay the bruises of past defeats and heal the breach of party differences with the balm of duty shirking and of issue straddling, for the people will be fooled by none of these things. Let them not vainly imagine that a discerning people will give more honor to those who, taking their own statement of the case, stood within the safe buttresses of the Congressional watch tower and sounded the charge without counting the cost, than to those who, as the fortunes of battle carried them far afield, fought to the grim finish the fight which the trumpet call brought on. Foolish are they who trust their political fortunes to the illusive hope that the American people once having put their hand to the plow will listen to the opportunists' call to turn back.

But let us assume that our friends on the other side or their party associates and leaders were in no way responsible with us for the Philippine question; that instead of advocating the policy of retreat only in the hour of accomplishment they had preached it from the onslaught; that the Republican party and its leaders were entirely responsible for the Cuban intervention and for all that has followed since. I do not believe there is any disposition on this side to shirk that responsibility, to apologize for anything that has followed. It is bootless at this late day to air our opinions as to whether or no American sovereignty could have been established in the Philippine Islands without bloodshed or with less bloodshed than has occurred. The fact remains that once the Government of Spain was destroyed there the establishment of American sovereignty was necessary to serve as a foundation of law and order upon which to build the government which is to succeed that which went down with the fall of the Spanish power. I am one of those who believe that in taking Manila we became responsible for the entire archipelago. That responsibility is not discharged except by the establishment of stable government throughout the archipelago; by the planting there, so far as we may be able to accomplish it, of the institutions which distinguish us as a people and upon which we believe must rest the permanent happiness, progress, and prosperity of any people.

Our brethren on the other side in the discussion of this question have generally started out by denying our moral right to coerce any portion of the Philippine people into a recognition of our authority, and generally end up by saying that it would be unprofitable to do so because the Philippine Islands do not offer an inviting field for American settlement or a profitable opportunity for American trade and enterprise; and it never seems to occur to them that these two arguments can not logically be advanced at the same time, for if we have been exceeding our duty and transcending our rights in the Philippines not all the fertile lands, not all the trade and commerce of the world, can justify our action, while their arguments carried to the logical conclusion would excuse any infraction of international and moral law, providing there is enough to be gained by it.

Mr. Chairman, we have poured out our treasure like water in the Philippines. Hundreds of American soldiers have given up their lives in establishing and maintaining our flag there. There can be no justification of our policy or of the sacrifice of precious lives in either the hope or realization of enlarged trade and commerce or increased prestige in the Orient, and when our Democratic friends assail not the Republican but the national policy in the Philippines, as they have often done, by attempting to show that no great increase in trade can be expected in those regions, their arguments are a confession that from their view point the policy which they now condemn would be justifiable if it brought a large return in trade.

I thank God that our past and present policy in the Philippine Islands rests on no such indefensible foundation as desire for conquest or lust of commerce, but it rests upon the firm and substantial basis of a duty clearly seen and bravely met; that it was neither conceived nor is it being executed in the ignoble desire of territorial aggrandizement or in the vain pride of power and prestige, but in the firm conviction that our destruction of the Spanish power laid the duty upon us to plant in the soil from which we had torn the root and branch of tyranny the institutions of liberty and self-government, and in a firm and steadfast resolution to do our duty as we see it, regardless of the cost, confident that our efforts shall not be in vain; that they shall bring to us, if nothing else, at least the consciousness of a duty well performed, and that the fruits of our efforts shall be the establishment of peace, order, and justice throughout the archipelago.

The gentleman from Missouri on yesterday saw fit to compare our policy in the Philippines with that of Russia in Poland, of England in Ireland, and to draw a picture of the Filipinos as a whole which would place them on a par, at least, with the citizens of any American Commonwealth. I have no disposition to minimize the virtues of any class of the Filipino people, but in the gentleman's calmer moments I have no doubt he would be inclined to revise the fervid rhetoric with which he painted a people largely illiterate, but recently, as the evolution of races is counted, barbarous, and many of them still in that condition—a people who have had no voice whatever, in all their history, in their own government; whose only knowledge of government has been that of a monarchy, the whole history of whose colonial administration has been one of unparalleled ferocity, duplicity, and oppression, with peoples like those of Poland and Ireland, with a long and glorious national history, with aptitude for and knowledge of the arts of government; intelligent, brave, self-reliant, liberty loving.

It may suit the political purposes of some gentlemen to compare the sacrifices of their own country in the fulfillment of a duty to the tyrannies and oppressions of despotic conquerors, but I do not apprehend that that view will be shared in by any considerable number of American people.

Brief as has been our occupation of the Philippine Archipelago, we have already progressed far in the establishment of institutions which in the course of a few years will vitally effect a change of character and conditions of the Filipino people for their good. We are even now maintaining order in provinces and districts which under Spanish rule were left largely to the whims, caprices, and despotisms of petty local tyrants or to the sway of savages; we have already given the people of the more enlightened provinces a larger participation in their local government than they have ever enjoyed in all their history; we are building school-houses, sending American school-teachers, employing capable native instructors, for the purpose of educating the people to a realization of their individual responsibility and a capability for governing themselves; we have relieved them from the extortions of the Spanish taxgatherer, from the forced levy of the savage and the Ladrone; we have gone in true American spirit, steadfastly, and earnestly in the work of planting institutions which must be a lasting and inestimable benefit to the people of the Philippines.

Let no man delude himself into the belief that it is in the mind of the American people to leave the work we have begun half accomplished, to halt or vacillate in the duty which Providence has placed upon us, for the American people, as a whole, fully appreciate their responsibility in this regard, though some few among us do not.

As a people we were charged first with the responsibility and granted the high privilege of developing and peopling a virgin continent, rich beyond all comparison in natural resources. Thanks to these bountiful gifts and to the energy and courage of our people, we have grown and developed to a commanding position among the nations of the earth. Can it be possible that there are any so unmindful of the duties which power, prestige, and commanding position lay upon nations as to imagine that we owe no duty to civilization and have no responsibilities beyond our borders; who imagine that we can, without loss of our own self-respect and degradation in the eyes of all the world, in the wantonness of our strength leave a people who our act has deprived of the only government they have ever known to the chance of domestic anarchy or foreign spoliation and exploitation?

Our policy in the Philippines is a policy of duty. Our presence there is demanded by every consideration of national honor and responsibility, and we shall remain there to the glory of our principles and to the infinite benefit of the people of the islands. As to the final outcome I have no fear. The task has not and will not be an easy one. No great and beneficent work ever has been accomplished without infinite cost and effort, but I have faith in the people of the Philippine Islands. I have faith in the efficacy of the principles of the Republic even when transplanted to the Orient, and I look forward with confidence to the no distant future when our work and our efforts there shall be applauded by the Filipino people themselves, when it shall be said, to the everlasting glory and honor of the Republic, that not only have we established and maintained the principles of liberty and justice on this continent, but have carried them undiluted, undefiled, into the heart of the Orient, where in the days to come the Philippine Archipelago, with her millions of law-abiding, enlightened, and prosperous citizens, shall be an everlasting example of the fidelity of the Republic to its duty and of the strengthened efficacy of the American ideals.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming propounded a question which he then proceeded to answer himself, but I notice that he took particular pains to evade the question I propounded to him. Whenever discussion of the Philippine Islands has come up on this floor, some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have arisen and said, "Oh, you voted for war, and therefore we must proceed to hold the Philippines indefinitely as colonies or as subjects." I deny that any gentleman can find any logical connection between holding the Philippine Islands and voting that Spain should cease to oppress the Cubans in this hemisphere. I deny there is any connection between stopping oppression by Spain in Cuba and beginning oppression by the United States in the Philippine Islands, but I want to challenge the statement of the gentleman as to what was the Republican policy. I have made some attempt to find it in the records, I have searched through the messages of the President and through the reports from the War Department, and I assert here that no man can tell authoritatively what the Republican policy is in the Philippine Islands.

Gentlemen will remember that a few years ago, when we first asserted from this side of the Chamber that it was the intention to hold the Philippine Islands, distinguished gentlemen rose on the other side of the Chamber and denied it indignantly—aye, they even challenged us then to point to a single sentence from the Republican President, to a single line in the Republican platform, to an authoritative statement from a Republican leader that they ever intended to hold the Philippine Islands, but that they were simply attempting to settle conditions in the Philippine Islands. That was the statement then. A year or two later came the statement that they were simply attempting to establish a government so as not to leave a condition of anarchy upon our withdrawal. What is the proposition now? Oh, that they are going to do their duty. What is that duty? Why do you not define it?

I defy any man to point to an authoritative statement as to what is to-day the Republican policy in the Philippine Islands and what they intend eventually to do. Whether they intend to hold those islands forever as colonies, whether they intend to give those islands self-government, whether they intend to make them States, the Republican party has never declared, and they dare not declare it. They dare not say they intend to hold them forever as colonies; they know the people of the United States in large measure will disapprove of it. They dare not say they intend to make them States and make the 10,000,000 Filipinos the equals of the American people, with equal privilege of voting for American Presidents; and notwithstanding this condition in his own party, the gentleman has the sublime nerve, if he will permit me to say it in kindness, to rise here and talk humorously as to what is the Democratic position. We have declared our position in our platform. You have not any position, and you have never had the courage to announce one on the floor of this House or elsewhere. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 22, 1902:

H. R. 11471. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

H. R. 11474. An act for the acknowledgment of deeds and other instruments in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico affecting land situate in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States; and

H. R. 9991. An act for the relief of F. E. Coyne.

On March 24, 1902:

H. R. 3148. An act for a marine hospital at Buffalo, N. Y.

On March 26, 1902:

H. R. 4607. An act to provide for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.

On March 27, 1902:

H. R. 3297. An act to correct the military record of William T. Pratt.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Manufacture, repairing, procuring, and issuing arms at the national armories, $1,700,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations made for the Ordnance Department shall be used in payment of freight charges on ordnance or ordnance stores issued by said department.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 33, in line 13, strike out the word "seven" and insert "one;" so that it will read "$1,100,000" instead of "$1,700,000."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, $1,100,000 was the amount estimated by the War Department and was the estimate sent to us.

The majority of the Committee on Military Affairs thought proper to increase this item from $1,100,000 to $1,700,000 upon the ground, as I understand it, that the National Guard would need a larger supply of firearms and upon the further ground that this country might get into a foreign war, when it would need more guns.

Now, on page 88 of the hearings, the chairman of the committee, in referring to this item, said:

The next item is a very important one; it is this item of $1,100,000. How much of a reserve of these modern guns will that provide?

General CROZIER. 65,000 or 70,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The militia of the different States are now clamoring for a law that will give them the new guns and take up the old guns. Can you do that?

General CROZIER. If a law were passed in that form we would have to increase the appropriation to make good the amount given the militia.

The CHAIRMAN. That question of supplying the militia would naturally come before the Committee on the Militia, but the manufacturing of guns comes before us.

General CROZIER. If that law should pass we would have to ask for an additional amount to replace those guns in this appropriation.

Mr. PARKER. Have you the machinery to increase your products?

General CROZIER. Yes; we can increase the product.

Mr. PARKER. How many can you make with your machinery when pressed?

General CROZIER. We can perhaps make 90,000 in a year, but we can always nearly double the output by running two shifts—employing two shifts of men and working sixteen hours instead of eight.

Mr. PARKER. Have you the men to run the machinery sixteen hours?

General CROZIER. Yes, sir; during the war we got out 350 a day—that is, working sixteen hours.

Now, there is no necessity for that increase. There is no possibility or probability of any foreign war at this time, and if there should be, an appropriation could be made.

There is no necessity for this from the standpoint of the National Guard, because under the appropriation asked for they can turn out 70,000 rifles a year, and there are not in the country over 100,000 of these national guards.

Therefore I say, in the interest of economy—and the gentleman says he wants to economize—let us cut out this appropriation, which the War Department does not ask for, and which the general of the Ordnance Bureau does not press in these hearings.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised at this motion. If the gentleman will examine the testimony of General Crozier he will find that in his oral statement, as well as in the letter which he sent to me on that subject, General Crozier expressed his opinion that this appropriation was necessary in order speedily to obtain a reserve for the use of the United States Army of 300,000 rifles. Does any gentleman in this Chamber forget—

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. Excuse me; I have only a few minutes. I will yield to the gentleman at the end of what I have to say.

Does anyone in this Chamber forget that at the outbreak of the Spanish war, when we called out 250,000 volunteers, we had no weapons with which to arm them except obsolete Springfield rifles? The Regular Army, then consisting of 25,000 men, were the only troops for whom it was possible to afford new magazine rifles, so that they should meet soldiers armed with Mausers on an equal footing.

Do we forget that under those circumstances every man felt as if it were murder to send our men into the field armed only with Springfield rifles? Do we forget how we were then asking why, as a protection against war, as a prevention of the danger of war, we did not have in our arsenals a reserve of rifles sufficient to put in the hands of our patriotic soldiers, so that we should not fear attack by any foreign country?

That was in 1898. With improved facilities we are now making 65,000 rifles a year with $1,100,000 appropriations. Last year the appropriation was smaller and we made less. Make the most liberal estimate for what rifles we have made since the war, and then remember that 50,000 of those went into the hands of the regular troops that have been added to our original 25,000 men to make the 75,000 men that we have now in service.

At least 50,000 rifles may be estimated to have been used up, lost, or destroyed in the requirements of the service. I do not state to this House, because it is a matter of confidence always, what the reserves stores of the Government are ready for the use of a citizen soldiery. But any man, reckoning from the number that we make, can say that in the armories of the United States, outside of arms in the hands of the regular troops, we have not enough rifles to arm the 250,000 troops which we called out in the war with Spain.

Any man can reckon this, and has a right to take that from the figures, knowing what we make and what we have used. Now, a country of such size that at one time it had 2,000,000 men in the field has no right to remain without sufficient small arms to be able to provide them to its armies on the instant. The gentleman's statement that we can make what we need on a sudden call is negated by what took place in the Spanish-American war. Now, the militia, amounting to 100,000 men, also ask for new guns. Shall we tell them they will have to wait two years until they can be manufactured?

It is true that we appropriate by the present law to the militia a million dollars a year, and give them the money to pay for rifles, but they want the guns, and they do not want to wait till we make them. We should have the rifles ready to deliver and still keep a reserve for volunteers. I am surprised the gentlemen from the Committee on Military Affairs should make such a proposition. Skimp your fortifications if you will; skim your artillery if you will—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL. I ask that the gentleman from New Jersey may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER. Skimp your Navy even, if you will. The protection of the country rests finally in a free people with arms in their hands; and the war in South Africa, to which appeal is so often made, proves the fact that the one defense of a free people consists not in staffs or in uniforms, or in forts or intrenchments, and not even in wealth; but the protection of a free people consists in men whose rulers have had the foresight, the wisdom, and the patriotism to insist upon laying up in arsenals small arms, the best the world knows, and ample ammunition with which to use them. It is in this view that I have asked for the additional appropriation, enough to make 50,000 more rifles a year for the present, until we have such a reserve. I wish I had asked for double that amount, for our factories could turn out 100,000 more in a year if we would pay for them.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER. I request the gentleman to wait until I am through. The cost of a soldier in the Regular Army is $1,000 a year. The cost of a gun is about $12; and we know it will not go out of fashion for at least five years. The Springfield stayed in use for thirty years. This is the cheapest, it is the best, it is the most necessary military appropriation ever asked of Congress, and we should make it; and if we do not do so, then the people will know the reason why. Now I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HAY. I will take it in my own time.

Mr. HULL. Just one minute.

Mr. HAY. I would like to reply to some of the astonishing remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman will have an opportunity before debate closes. He should close the debate on this amendment.

I want to call the attention of the House to the reason why this committee increased the amount over the estimate submitted by the War Department. The gentleman from Virginia read a part of the hearings. On page 88 of the hearings, General Crozier, in answer to my question, said:

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is a very important one; it is this item of $1,100,000. How much of a reserve of these modern guns will that provide?

General CROZIER. Sixty-five thousand or 70,000 a year.

I then said:

The militia of the different States are now clamoring for a law that will give them the new guns and take up the old guns. Can you do that on this appropriation?

And General Crozier answered:

If a law were passed in that form we would have to increase the appropriation to make good the amount given the militia.

Now, on page 90 he returns to this question. Mr. ESCH of Wisconsin, a member of the committee, asked him this question:

And in addition to that there are appropriations made by the several States?

General Crozier answered:

Yes, sir; some of the States are quite liberal, and when material is used by the General Government, as was done during the Spanish-American war, the States are reimbursed, as is proper.

Then Mr. BRICK asked him this question:

Mr. BRICK. If this $1,000,000 appropriation is made for the militia of the United States, will there be enough money to equip each man?

And General Crozier answered:

General CROZIER. They get now $900,000 more than before. It will take between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 to equip all the organizations with the magazine rifle, and that would do it in three years.

Now, to ask the War Department to give a supplemental estimate would have brought no information, because the War Department have no information as to what was proposed by Congress; but after the estimates were submitted to Congress the Committee on the Militia have reported a bill asking that we give these new arms to the militia. When the National Guard Organization met in Washington a few weeks ago they were unanimous in asking that we make this exchange of guns. In this proposed militia bill it is proposed to exchange new guns for the old. So the expense of manufacture must be carried on this bill. The old gun has already been charged up against their appropriation, and if we are to supply them with these guns, it is necessary that this Congress appropriate $600,000 more in order to make that exchange. And in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the militia ought to be encouraged in every way that it is possible for the Federal Government to encourage such organizations by giving them the best gun we can make, because every one of us recognizes it is upon the militia the country must depend in every great war, and for that reason I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know why the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] should be so very much surprised at the amendment I offered, because I voted against the appropriation when it came before the Committee on Military Affairs, and he was present and heard it. I appreciate very much the enthusiasm of the gentleman from New Jersey, which seems to be infused into him because of the proposition to cut down this item, which has not been asked for by the War Department. The gentleman says that these guns will not go out of fashion for five years.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is a most excellent reason why we should not make a large number of these guns, if they are going out of fashion in five years. Then we should have to go to work and make new guns. The War Department must have known what it was doing when it asked for an appropriation of $1,100,000 to make a reserve supply of these guns. Why should we now, when we have got an Army fully armed with these guns, and when we can turn out this year 70,000 of them and are turning out every day guns of that character, why should we have this large appropriation when we should have made enough this year and next year to supply the National Guard?

Mr. HULL. Does not General Crozier state that it will take three years to arm the National Guard?

Mr. HAY. General Crozier says it would take three years to arm them under the appropriation, but he also stated that there was only 100,000 of the National Guards now, and therefore his statement must have been a mistake, because our own soldiers are armed with these guns, and if there were only 100,000 of the National Guard, and we can make 70,000 a year, it seems that he must be mistaken.

Mr. HULL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it requires a good many guns to make up for the casualties that occur from time to time.

Mr. HAY. How many?

Mr. HULL. I can not say, but I think quite a large per cent. I think General Crozier's statement is probably true in regard to the length of time it will take to arm the militia. He should know.

Mr. HAY. I can not see exactly the force of the gentleman's remark, and I was unable to catch the percentage that he stated.

Mr. HULL. I did not give it because I have not got it, but it does take quite a per cent.

Mr. HAY. Is there any great necessity for giving the National Guard these arms now?

Mr. HULL. I should say, yes; on the general theory that if you have an organized National Guard you ought to give them the best possible arms.

Mr. HAY. I agree to that; but is it necessary to spend the money now, if you propose to do it?

Mr. HULL. It would not be necessary to continue to expend it after the next fiscal year.

Mr. HAY. I understand it is proposed to continue the appropriation to provide for a foreign war. That was the contention of the gentleman from New Jersey. I hope the House will adopt the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was considered and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase of ordnance and ordnance stores and supplies may be made by the Ordnance Department in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purpose shall be immediately reported to the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, there is an error in line 22, and I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, page 33, strike out the word "purpose," and insert the word "purchase."

The amendment was agreed to.

This completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on the bill may have leave to print.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that the Committee of the Whole does not give general leave to print. The motion of the gentleman will be in order in the House, but not in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the request for unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask a similar privilege on my part.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12804) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that as amended the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, they will be submitted in gross.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

INDEPENDENCE OF CUBA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the Congress timely consideration of measures for maintaining diplomatic and consular representatives in Cuba and for carrying out the provisions of the act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, approved March 2, 1901, reading as follows:

"Provided further, That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled 'For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect,' the President is hereby authorized to 'leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people' so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba substantially as follows:

"I.

"That the government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain, by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

"II.

"That said government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

"III.

"That the government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life and property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the government of Cuba.

"IV.

"That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

"V.

"That the government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

"VI.

"That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

"VII.

"That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba, and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

"VIII.

"That by way of further assurance the government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States."

The people of Cuba having framed a constitution embracing the foregoing requirements, and having elected a president who is soon to take office, the time is near for the fulfillment of the pledge of the United States to leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people. I am advised by the Secretary of War that it is now expected that the installation of the government of Cuba and the termination of the military occupation of that island by the United States will take place on the 20th of May next.

It is necessary and appropriate that the establishment of international relations with the government of Cuba should coincide with its inauguration, as well to provide a channel for the conduct of diplomatic relations with the new State as to open the path for the immediate negotiation of conventional agreements to carry out the provisions of the act above quoted. It is also advisable that consular representation be established without delay at the principal Cuban ports in order that commerce with the island may be conducted with due regard to the formalities prescribed by the revenue and navigation statutes of the United States, and that American citizens in Cuba may have the customary local resorts open to them for their business needs and the case arising, for the protection of their rights.

I therefore recommend that provision be forthwith made, and the salaries appropriated, to be immediately available, for—

a. Envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Republic of Cuba .....	$10,000
b. Secretary of legation .....	2,000
c. Second secretary of legation .....	1,500
d. Consul-general at Habana .....	5,000
e. Consuls at—
Cienfuegos .....	3,000
Santiago de Cuba .....	3,000

I do not recommend the present restoration of the consulates formerly maintained at Baracoa, Cardenas, Matanzas, Nuevitas, Sagua la Grande, and San Juan de los Remedios. The commercial interests at those ports heretofore have not been large. The consular fees collected there during the fiscal year 1896-97 aggregated $752.10. It is believed that the actual needs of the six offices named can be efficiently subserved by agents under the three principal consular offices until events may show the necessity of erecting a full consulate at any point.

The commercial and political conditions in the island of Cuba while under the Spanish Crown afford little basis for estimating the local development of intercourse with this country under the influence of the new relations which have been created by the achievement of Cuban independence, and which are to be broadened and strengthened in every proper way by conventional pacts with the Cubans and by wise and beneficent legislation aiming to stimulate the commerce between the two countries, if the great task we accepted in 1898 is to be fittingly accomplished.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 27, 1902.

EFFICIENCY OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. DALZELL. I submit a report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules having had under consideration House resolution 151, submits the following substitute:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this rule the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider Senate bill numbered 1025, 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service;' that said bill shall be considered as a special order until finally disposed of, but shall not interfere with appropriation or revenue measures, conference reports, or other measures of privilege or special orders heretofore made."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that I should occupy any time in discussing this proposed rule. Its purpose, which is very plain, is to make immediately in order the consideration of the Senate bill for the promotion of the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and to permit that bill to hold its place until finally disposed of, not to interfere, however, with privileged matters.

Mr. HULL. If the rule should be adopted without any further qualification, would it not cut off pension business to-morrow?

Mr. DALZELL. No; there is a reservation of previous orders.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire only a few minutes myself, but I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], a member of the committee that reported the bill, would like to be heard against the adoption of this proposed rule.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois desire?

Mr. MANN. I should like to have half an hour if I can get it.

Mr. DALZELL. Make it fifteen minutes.

Mr. MANN. What I have to say will be upon the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Does my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] want to occupy any time himself?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to occupy about five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be reminded when I have occupied five minutes, because I want to yield the rest of the twenty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this rule, because it brings before this House a bill which I think is the opening wedge to a class of legislation that it would be very dangerous for our Government to enter upon. I have nothing to say against the original bill as drafted, nor have I anything to say against the gentlemen concerned in pressing the bill. The officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are men of high character and standing, but in the end they are simply civil employees of the Government. You can not make any more out of them than that. They have taken part in several of our wars, and have conducted themselves gallantly. But they are not a part of the military or naval department of this Government. Their business is that of revenue agents at sea, just as the deputy marshal or internal-revenue collector is a revenue agent on land. They are controlled by the Secretary of the Treasury. He orders them to come and go. They are not under ordinary circumstances expected to do the work of a naval or military officer.

It is true that in time of war their vessels, and sometimes their personal services, are used for war purposes. But they do not have to go to war. They can resign if they do not care to carry their vessel into naval conflict.

There are thousands of other good citizens in this country who go to war when war comes on. They go as volunteers. Is that any reason why we should establish a retired list for all the volunteer officers who served in the civil war or who served in our Spanish war? Not at all. Military duty is not their life employment; it is only an incident in their lives. But with the regular Navy or Army officer his line of duty is the business of his lifetime, and we provide for him a salary accordingly, and then a place on the retired list with pay when he has no longer work to do.

But these gentlemen in the Revenue-Cutter Service, as I have already stated, are merely the revenue agents of the Government to prevent smuggling, to see that the tariff taxes are paid, that the tariff laws are carried out. They receive their orders from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we once start upon a precedent that authorizes the retirement of civil employees of the Government upon a pension where are we going to stop? Last year there were upon the Calendar several bills, and there have been introduced this session, if they have not already been reported, several bills, for retiring upon a civil pension men engaged in the Weather Bureau Service, in the coast-guard service, in various departments of this Government—all these bills providing for a retirement pay or a civil pension list.

I grant you (for I believe it is the fact) that of all these bills the revenue-cutter bill is the most meritorious. But whenever you break down the line and start in this direction, where are you going to stop? Each branch of the Government service will say it has meritorious men who have given their lives for the good of the Government and who ought to be taken care of in their old age. Mr. Speaker, do we not give our lives to the Government? Would not a great many of us be willing to serve our constituents for a great many years to come and yet ask no retirement pay?

All through the civil service of the Government we have men who have given their lives to the service, but we are supposed to pay them salaries from which they can lay aside something, as they ought to do, for the day and the hour when they must retire from active service.

Now, that is the reason I am opposed to the general bill. The reason I am opposed to the adoption of the rule is this: We have a number of bills on the Calendar that are seeking the consideration of this House, meritorious bills, bills where they have an absolutely unanimous report from the committees from which they come. I say that that class of bills should have the right of way. This rule is brought in here to give this bill the right of way.

Now, here comes a bill before this House, true, reported by a majority of a committee, but with a minority report, and that minority report not along partisan lines. If it was—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one word, and then I will yield the balance of my time. If it was reported only by a majority of this House and the minority of this House was opposed to it it might be said that party exigencies required it to be taken up, but in the minority report members on that side of the House have reported against its consideration as well as members on this side of the House, and under these circumstances I say this is not the hour or the time when this House should engage upon the consideration of this bill. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to address myself particularly in opposition to the bill itself at this time, but I hope I may give a few reasons which may appeal to the members of the House why this bill should not be considered at this time. There are pending before Congress various bills of like character in regard to other branches of the Government. The bill which the rule proposes to make the continuous order is a bill called "A bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service." The title is misleading. It is a bill designed wholly for the purpose of increasing the salaries of revenue-cutter officers and of creating a retired list for those officers. There are many other branches of the Government which desire the same thing. The Railway Mail Service, the Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Service, and various other bureaus or branches of the Government service which are dangerous in character are requesting Congress that something shall be done in reference to a retired list.

What I say, Mr. Speaker, is that there is not sufficient information obtainable in reference to the Revenue-Cutter Service by which we can learn whether this Service should be picked out from all the other branches of the civil department of the Government for preferment.

And I call the attention of the members of the House to this peculiar situation of affairs: The Revenue-Cutter Service is the one branch of the Government employ which makes no report of its doings or its expenditures. The Life-Saving Service makes an annual report, which is published; the Marine-Hospital Service makes an annual report, which is published; so does the Light-House Service, so does the steamboat inspector, so does the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and so do all the other branches of the Treasury Department. The one exception, the one branch of the Government service in the Treasury which makes no report at all, is the Revenue-Cutter Service.

There has been no annual report from that Service for four years, no report from this branch of the Government since 1897, although this is the one which is now seeking preference at our hands over all other branches of the service. Nor is this all. In 1888 Congress provided—and I ask the attention of the members of the House:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at its next session a detailed statement of expenditures for the fiscal year 1888 under the appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service; and annually thereafter a detailed statement of expenditures under said appropriation shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Here is a specific statute requiring this Revenue-Cutter Service to submit to Congress a detailed statement of its expenditures. If any gentleman on the floor of this House can find a detailed statement by this service of its expenditures I will withdraw any opposition which I have to the passage of the bill. This service has spurned the law of the United States. It pays no attention to the statutes of the Government. It makes no annual report of its doings. It refuses to comply with the statute which says that it shall make a detailed report of expenditures—

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. HEPBURN. What officer did the gentleman say was required to make this report?

Mr. MANN. The Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Treasury in all of these cases means the officer in command of the particular branch of the service. It may have been the fault of the Secretary of the Treasury that he did not require this law to be complied with. That is not what I am calling to the attention of the House. I say that before the House considers this proposition it is entitled to have the report which the law says the service shall make. And whether it be the fault of the Secretary of the Treasury or of the Revenue-Cutter Service makes no difference.

Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to investigate the subject of this bill as best I could for a year and a half. I have not been able to acquire the information which ought to be laid before the House, because this branch of the Government service makes no report. The only report of the expenditures of the Revenue-Cutter Service, in any way, shape, or manner, made to Congress is included in the "combined statement of receipts and expenditures" of the Government, wherein, under the head of the "Customs service" expenditures is a one-line item, "Expenses of Revenue-Cutter Service, $1,246,550.61."

This is the only detailed statement made to Congress.

Before we pass upon the question of considering this bill we ought to be permitted to examine the detailed statement which the law requires them to make and which they do not make.

Nor is this all. The statute of 1889 provides that this service shall make a report in detail, showing separately the amount required for pay of officers, rations, etc., and that there shall be included—in the Annual Book of Estimates a statement showing the authorized number of officers and cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service, their rank and pay; also the number of men constituting the crews of vessels in said service.

They make a pretense of complying with this section of the statute, but they do not really comply with its requirements.

Mr. Speaker, the only report of the Revenue-Cutter Service for last year, published anywhere, is included in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury and covers less than one-third of a page, so far as the annual operations of the department are concerned; and the statement in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, furnished by the Revenue-Cutter Service itself to the Secretary of the Treasury, is not true. The Secretary of the Treasury reports:

The following is a summary of the work performed by vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service during the year.

And here are half a dozen or more items, one of which is the following:

Lives saved (actually rescued) from drowning, 178.

I do not call attention to this for the purpose of opposing the bill at this time, but for the purpose of trying to show to the House that we have not sufficient information upon which to base intelligent action. The statement in this report of the Secretary of the Treasury that the Revenue-Cutter Service "actually rescued from drowning," in the language of the report, 178 lives last year is not true.

In order to make up the report of 178 lives saved last year, "actually rescued from drowning," they included 103 lives, as I find by examination of the books in the Department itself, which they credit to the revenue cutter Gresham as saving from the barkentine Fraternidade on August 13, 1900; and I have here a copy of the report of the captain of the revenue cutter Gresham at that time, stating that he saved no lives at all. If we had had a printed report of the operations of this Service it would have shown that they saved no lives at that time; but in order to make out that they are doing great work, they furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury a statement that they saved 178 lives, including in the number these 103 lives which were not saved, which the captain said were not saved from drowning, on August 13, 1900.

Nearly all of the report is equally misleading. The Revenue-Cutter Service has not made a report for four years, because it has been seeking this legislation during that time, and it has not dared to publish to Congress what its duties are or what it is doing.

If the report of the Revenue-Cutter Service were published it would show that no boat in the control of the Revenue-Cutter Service had its anchor weighed so much as eight days per month. If this report were published it would show that the average service of the revenue cutters during the last year is equal to about four days per month per vessel. I dare the Revenue-Cutter Service to publish its reports; and I say, Mr. Speaker, that until the branch of the Government which is required to make reports, complies with the law and makes the reports, it is not proper for us to take up the time of the House in order to increase the salaries of that service and give it a retired list ahead of any other branch of the Government.

Every part of the civil Government wants a retired list. Every branch of the Government wants its superannuated clerks cared for. Why should we prefer a service because it is unknown and makes great claims?

Let the Revenue-Cutter Service publish their reports, and if the reports show that they do what they claim, perhaps they may be entitled to it. I deny that they are entitled to the preference. I deny that they do the work which they claim that they do, though I do not wish to reflect upon the captain who is at the head of that service, and who is a courteous gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I take it that this rule is presented to the House at this time, because last year through the persistence of some revenue-cutter officers there was obtained a petition signed by a majority of the House asking that a rule then be reported. In conformity with that petition a rule—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Can I get about two more minutes?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. MANN. In accordance with that petition, Mr. Speaker, a rule was brought in from the Committee on Rules at that time, and the bill was made a continuing order. I suppose now that this rule is reported simply because the bill was never finished in the last House. I do not believe that the leaders on this side of the House are in favor of the passage of this bill or that they are in favor of the passage of this rule to force the consideration of the bill without an opportunity to understand it by reports from the Department itself.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that I should say anything, I hope, in favor of the consideration of this rule, after the remarks that have been made by the gentleman from Illinois. If a speech could show the necessity of the consideration of a question, the statements that have been made by that gentleman appear to me would serve all proper purposes. The gentleman has charged that one of the chief officers of this Government, who has been charged by a statute with the performance of a specific duty, for four years—he states so—has contumaciously refused to perform that duty. Is it not wise that after this charge has been made, after this negligence has been specifically pointed out, after a base motive has been given for this neglect of duty, that there should be some investigation by the peoples' representatives?

He has charged that officer of this Government, whose duty it is to make reports of facts, to state truths, that year after year he has lied in the discharge of his official duty. Is it not time there should be some inquiry with regard to a matter of that kind, and that the gentleman should be given an opportunity to make proof of reckless and irresponsible charges of this character? I think that the House must have been satisfied when the gentleman took his seat that at least he should have an opportunity in a proper and a legitimate way to make good some small modicum at least of these grave charges. I yield back the time to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to this order just a moment. As I understand it, it is a continuing order, not to conflict with orders heretofore made, not to conflict with revenue or appropriation bills. The gentleman will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. DALZELL. What was it the gentleman said?

Mr. CANNON. I say, as I understand it, it is a continuing order covering this bill, not, however, to conflict with orders heretofore made, or with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. DALZELL. Or with conference reports.

Mr. CANNON. But, with that exception, like a jack-in-the-box, from this time until the end of this session, and the next, too, the moment that those privileged matters are out of the way it pops up like a jack-in-the-box, and all other matters on the Calendar are subordinated until this is finished. It becomes a matter of the highest privilege. It is not often that an order of this kind is made, and I doubt the wisdom of making it. Now, then, as to the merit of the proposed legislation, I shall not discuss it. That is a matter that gentlemen differ about, and I have no doubt honestly differ about. If I were to discuss it, I should say that we are coming to the parting of the ways in the matter of enlarging the retired list for those in the service of the Government. It now covers the Army, and it now covers the Navy. This service wants to go on.

The Light-House Service and the Life-Saving Service also want to go on; and the last two named services have, perhaps, more merit than this; and then there are various other branches of the civil service that want to go on the retired list. I do not believe that the House ought to adopt this order, making it a continuing order, as it does, to the exclusion of all other business, until the end of this Congress; and therefore I shall vote against the order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does it interfere with the Pension Calendar and the Claims Calendar?

Mr. CANNON. I take it, not.

Mr. DALZELL. It does not.

Mr. CANNON. Those are special orders, heretofore made.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no opinion to express at this time upon the merits of the bill. But I think that the gentleman from Illinois is anticipating a condition of things that can not possibly exist. With respect to the form of the rule, it is a form which has been used a great many times. In fact, it is the usual form, making it in order to discuss a question until it shall have been disposed of, saving the rights of matters of higher privilege.

The gentleman says it may pop up at any time, as it did during the last session of Congress. Now, the reason why it was a nuisance to the House in the last Congress was because the rule was brought in during the last days of the session, I think within a week or ten days before the end of the session, at a time when, as gentlemen know, the House is engaged almost every day in the consideration of conference reports and matters of that kind. It is not possible, in my judgment, that any such condition of things can exist during this period of the session, and I think, therefore, the fears of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] are not well founded. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 84, noes 54.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, some gentlemen on this side do not understand what they are to vote upon. I ask that the substitute resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute resolution asking for the consideration of the act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is a substitute resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute for the original resolution, so that one vote will adopt the resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 67, answered "present" 16, not voting 154; as follows:

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in voting upon this proposition a few minutes ago, I did not recall the fact that I am paired with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER]. I am not perfectly sure how he would vote on this proposition if he were here, but I ask to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. RUSSELL. I have been announced as paired with the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN]. I therefore wish to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

Mr. DEEMER. Mr. Speaker, I have been announced as paired with my colleague, Mr. MUTCHLER. As I have voted, I wish to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe it does not require a motion now to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. It is usual to make such a motion; but as the Chair finds the terms of the resolution are mandatory so that on its adoption the House must at once resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] does not want the House to go on now with the bill for more than a short time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Only a few moments.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. OLMSTED in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HEPBURN. The report in this case was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], to whom I yield the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not this evening enter upon a discussion of the bill now under consideration. I simply want the attention of the committee for a very brief period to reply to what seems to me the unwarranted attack of the gentleman from Illinois upon the Secretary of the Treasury, present and past. The gentleman referred in his remarks in opposition to the adoption of the rule to the statute of October 2, 1888, which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at its next session a detailed statement of expenditures of the Revenue-Cutter Service for the fiscal year 1888 under the appropriation made therefor, and annually thereafter a detailed statement of the expenditures under each said appropriation shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

The gentleman from Illinois made the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury had deliberately, from the time of the enactment of that statute down to the present time, defied the mandate of Congress and had refused and neglected at any time to make the report required by that statute. In 1889, on the 2d day of March, that statute was modified so that it read that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to submit the estimates for the Revenue-Cutter Service for the fiscal year 1891, and for each year thereafter, in detail, showing separately the amounts required for pay of officers, rations for officers, pay of crews, rations of crews, fuel, repairs, outfits, ship chandlery, and for traveling and contingent expenses, etc. Now, the gentleman states that that report has never been submitted to Congress. The gentleman is absolutely and entirely in error, Mr. Chairman. The report has been submitted to Congress each year; is submitted this year in the Book of Estimates, and I read—

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Upon what basis does the gentleman say that the statute of 1888 which relates to detailed expenditures was modified by the statute of 1889 in referring to estimates for future expenditures?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, the two expenditures and estimates are governed by the same statute—by the two statutes the two are governed.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not claim that they are governed by the same statute?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are governed by the two statutes—the question of submitting a statement of the amount expended and of the estimates for the following year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it not true that the statute of 1888 required a detailed statement of expenditures?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And that the statute of 1889 required a statement of estimates for future expenditures?

Mr. SHERMAN. It required a statement of estimates for future expenditures; correct.

Mr. MANN. Did not the statute of 1888 require a detailed statement of the expenditures already made?

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I am getting to that; and in the Book of Estimates for the following year and for every year since, including the present year—it is found in the Book of Estimates this year on page 289—is included a statement of the amount appropriated during the last year and the amount estimated for the following year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman find that the estimates for this year is in the report purporting to show what the expenditures for the last year were?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have them.

Mr. SHERMAN. The same book includes expenditures for the last year.

Mr. MANN. It gives the appropriation for last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. But not the expenditures.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, it gives appropriations for last year in this same book and the estimates for the following year. It is understood to be a compliance with the requirements of the statutes and is so stated in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will understand me that I have no desire to do injustice to the Revenue-Cutter Service—

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentleman has no desire either to do an injustice to the Secretary of the Treasury, but I think he has done so in stating the case. This Book of Estimates is intended by the Treasury Department and was considered to be a compliance with the statute and is, in my judgment, a substantial compliance with it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman himself claim that an estimate submitted for the coming year, which states what the appropriation was in the appropriation bill last year, is a compliance with a statute requiring a detailed statement of expenditures made by the Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. It shows the amount appropriated under each item specifically for the last year, and is a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statutes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I beg the gentleman's pardon; but, of course, it does not purport to show the expenditures of last year. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, at the same time of the passing of the statute in 1888 requiring a detailed statement of expenditures of Revenue-Cutter Service, provision was made for a detailed statement of the expenditures of the Smithsonian Institution, and that department makes to Congress an annual report, giving its detailed expenditures of that department. I have been unable to find, and I think the gentleman is unable to find, any detailed statement of expenditures at all. The only thing is the estimate.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I pretend to find is what is in the Book of Estimates, which shows the amount appropriated for last year and the estimates of the requirements for the various divisions of the Bureau for the following year, and it is, in my judgment, intended for, and is, a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute of 1888 and 1889. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any time to-night in discussing the merits of the bill. I will leave that for to-morrow morning. I did not wish to adjourn to-night until I had set right what I thought an injustice done the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman another question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I see here in the Book of Estimates for last year a statement showing amount appropriated under each head of appropriations $1,400,000, and they give various amounts of appropriations, and I have been unable to find anything which purports to tell what the expenditures were, and if the gentleman can point out anything to that effect I will be glad to have him do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. It shows what the appropriations were for the several items of last year immediately following that.

Mr. MANN. Well, does the gentleman think that the Congress making the appropriation bill and then passing a law requiring the Department to show what the detailed expenses were would simply ask the Department to report back to Congress what the appropriation bill itself contained and say that was a compliance with the statute?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Treasury Department has understood during all these years that this was a substantial compliance with the statute, and it has so reported each year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means that the Revenue-Cutter Service has made that contention. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean that the Treasury Department has. So far as we are concerned, so far as the estimates are concerned, so far as the statute is concerned, it refers to the Secretary of the Treasury and not to the Revenue-Cutter Service.

I move that the committee do now rise, Mr. Chairman.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 28, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MISSOURI RIVER IMPROVEMENTS, ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COCHRAN. I rise to ask for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, which is now privileged.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the privileged resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 27).

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby instructed to send to the House of Representatives information as to the condition of river improvements heretofore constructed on the Missouri River at a point south of St. Joseph, Mo.; whether said improvements are incomplete and, on account of their incomplete condition, in danger of destruction; and the sum necessary to complete said improvements and prevent their destruction by the encroachments of the current.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask if this has been reported by a committee. It would not be privileged unless it is reported by a committee or unless the time prescribed by the rule has elapsed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution calling for information from one of the Departments of the Government. It has been in the hands of the committee for some time and not reported. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of it and that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. PAYNE. The question is, How long has it been before the committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. More than a month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to discharge the Committee on Rivers and Harbors from the further consideration of the resolution and to consider the same in the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "concurrent" and inserting the word "House."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the word "concurrent" and insert the word "House," so that it will receive consideration as a House resolution. This will involve another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "concurrent" and insert "House."

In lines 1 and 2, after the word "Resolved," strike out the words "by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, is the resolution open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COCHRAN. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri to insert the word "requested" instead of "instructed." It will answer the same purpose, and will be the usual form.

Mr. COCHRAN. I make no objection to such a change.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the word "instructed" will be changed to "requested." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he change the form of his resolution so that it will call for the information he has suggested with reference to all the improvements south of Sioux City, Iowa, rather than St. Joseph, Mo.

Mr. COCHRAN. I have the great honor to represent only a very small part of that vast territory, and I do not feel called upon to extend my jurisdiction.

Mr. MERCER. Will the gentleman accept an amendment of that sort?

Mr. COCHRAN. I prefer not to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

DUTIES PAID IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11096) to refund the amount of duties paid in Porto Rico upon articles imported from the several States from April 11, 1899, to May 1, 1900, to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgment thereon, and making an appropriation therefor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims of the United States of all claims against the United States arising out of the payment of customs duties to the military authorities in the island of Porto Rico upon articles imported from the several States, which articles were entered at the several ports of entry in Porto Rico from and including April 11, 1899, to May 1, 1900, and the Court of Claims is empowered and directed to ascertain the amounts of such duties paid during said period and to enter judgment against the United States for the several amounts so paid, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the several dates of payment of such duties to the dates of such judgments, respectively, in all actions for the recovery of such duties now pending in the Court of Claims and in all actions for the recovery of such duties which may be brought in said court within six months from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the amendment of the committee amended by striking out all after the word "read."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend until consent has been given by the House. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman make some explanation of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I want to say a word. This bill, in my judgment, should have gone to the Committee on Ways and Means, because it is a bill affecting the revenue, and I do not think that it gives the Committee on the Judiciary jurisdiction of the bill from the fact that it provides for a recovery in the Court of Claims. But the bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary before the Ways and Means Committee was aware that any such bill was before the House.

In the meantime the parties interested in this matter had appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and stated the facts in reference to these claims; and I think, so far as I know, the Committee on Ways and Means were not opposed to this refund of duty, duties paid in Porto Rico, which under the decision of the Supreme Court ought not to have been exacted. The bill provides also for the payment of interest. The parties would be entitled to interest if they could get jurisdiction of the collector, but the General Government has sent General Davis—

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. It is impossible to hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman will suspend.

Mr. PAYNE. The General Government has, as I said, in the meantime sent the collector, who was General Davis, of the Regular Army, to the Philippine Islands, and the parties can not, of course, reach him to bring him before the courts of the United States. If they had been able to serve process upon him, they would have been able to collect these claims and interest upon them, because it is the uniform rule. I do not, therefore, regard this as setting a precedent of the collection of interest on claims, as that is a subject that has been settled by the courts and Congress wherever suits have been commenced and judgment has been given against the Government for the claim and the interest on the claim. For that reason I do not interpose any objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out all of the committee amendment after the word "read" and inserting in lieu thereof the following—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the copy of the bill at the desk does not indicate any committee amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I move to strike out the title and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. It simply changes the reading of the title.

The SPEAKER. That will come after the bill has been considered and passed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very well.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine now moves the following amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read:

"A bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to render judgments for the principal and interest in actions to recover duties collected by the military authorities of the United States upon articles imported into Porto Rico from the several States between April 11, 1899, and May 1, 1900."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered to the amendment offered by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY RESERVATION AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11936) providing for the transfer of the title to the military reservation at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Baton Rouge, La., full and complete title to the buildings and grounds of the United States barracks at Baton Rouge for the purposes of said university and college, except that portion of said ground that lies westward of a line 100 feet east of the center of the railroad track of the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railroad Company, and said excepted land may be used and occupied by said railroad company, and should said railroad cease to use and occupy said land, then the possession shall revert to said university.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 3, page 2, strike out the word "possession" and insert the word "title."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much land this gives away?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that in 1886 the Government gave the university this land. It has been its home for fifteen years. It is on it and occupying it and everything on it. It is about 210 acres. It has already been disposed of by the Government, and nothing remains now. The only reservation was that it should revert to the Government if the Secretary of War should consider it was needed for military purposes. The Secretary of War has reported that he had no such need of the land, and the institution now wants a full title, so that they can continue erecting buildings upon this land for the uses and purposes of the university.

Mr. PAYNE. Congress originally gave them the right to use it?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Is it not the intention of the authorities of this university to sell a part of this land?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. It is possible they may desire to exchange a portion of it for other lands.

Mr. PARKER. To exchange it for other lands. Was not the original statute of 1886 in this form—that the United States lend or transfer to the university possession of this particular land?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. That is true.

Mr. PARKER. Providing that it should only remain theirs so long as it was used for university purposes?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. No, sir.

Mr. PARKER (continuing). And it provided further that it might be taken back by the Secretary of War whenever it was needed by the United States.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. No, sir; not that. The gentleman is correct in only one particular. There is no question of the use of the university.

Mr. PARKER. I would like to have the statute of 1886 here.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I have it here.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman why the bill was not referred to the proper committee—the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. That question was entirely in the hands of the gentleman himself. I called upon him to get his opinion as to the jurisdiction of the committees over this particular bill. He agreed with me that the Committee on Military Affairs was the proper committee.

Mr. LACEY. The idea was that there was nothing left except a military right, and that was the only one to be extinguished.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was engrossed and read the third time, and passed.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CENTRAL ARIZONA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 11998, and in that connection I ask that a bill identical in language, passed by the Senate, may be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the House bill been reported by a committee?

Mr. LACEY. The House bill has been reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Has the Senate bill been reported from the committee?

Mr. LACEY. It has not, Mr. Speaker; it has come in since the House bill was reported by the House committee. It is the bill S. 4363, and is identical in language with the House bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Senate bill is not within the jurisdiction of the House.

Mr. LACEY. It can be by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It would involve the discharge of the committee from further consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be read before these various things are agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. I suggested this to prevent the reading of the bill a second time. Let the House bill be read.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from consideration of the bill S. 4363, the identical bill in language having been reported in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from consideration of the bill S. 4363, and that House bill 11998 may be taken up and considered now. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be read first.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I believe the title to the bill has not yet been read.

Mr. LACEY. The bill is a bill granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountain Forest Reserve. It was a bill introduced by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, and subject to further objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Central Arizona Railway Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, is authorized to construct and maintain a railroad over and through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve (heretofore reserved from entry and settlement and set apart as a public reserve by William McKinley, President of the United States, by proclamation dated the 17th day of August, 1898).

Said road to be constructed upon and across the said San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve from a point at or near the town of Flagstaff, in the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, thence in a southwesterly direction by the most practicable route to the town of Jerome, in the county of Yavapai, Territory of Arizona, and thence in a southeasterly direction to the town of Globe, in the county of Gila, Territory of Arizona; also to construct and maintain such side tracks, extensions, switches, and spurs as may be necessary to the convenient construction, use, and maintenance of said railroad in the said counties of Coconino, Yavapai, and Gila. Said right of way being granted subject to the rules and restrictions and carrying all the rights and privileges of an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, said act being hereby made applicable to the right of way hereby granted: Provided, That no timber shall be cut by said railroad company for any purpose outside of the right of way herein granted.

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Senate bill be considered.

The SPEAKER. The messenger has been sent to get the Senate bill, as the House can not act on a copy. The Chair is informed that the room is closed, and the gentleman will have to withdraw his bill.

Mr. LACEY. I have a copy of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. A copy will not do. The House must have the bill in its possession.

Mr. LACEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the matter be passed over for the present, and I will get the bill.

COMMUTATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9037) to allow the commutation of homestead entries in certain cases and providing for fees and commissions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That homestead settlers upon the ceded portion of the Sioux Indian Reservation in South Dakota who made entry subsequent to March 3, 1899, shall be entitled to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to allow commutation of homestead entries in certain cases," approved January 26, 1901, and in commuting shall only be required to pay the price provided in the law under which original entry was made.

SEC. 2. That when any homestead entry shall be commuted to cash final commissions shall be paid thereon by the entryman at the same rate as is now payable upon final homestead entries, with a like rate of commission on payments for excess acreage.

With the following amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands:

Strike out section 2 of the bill and amend the title so as to read: "To allow commutation of homestead entries in certain cases."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Pending the request for unanimous consent, I wish to ask whether the bill has been reported by any committee of the House.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to reserve the right to object until we hear an explanation.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I have just stated, has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands. Its passage is also recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Its object is simply to cure a defect in an act which was passed by the last Congress allowing to settlers on land formerly included within Indian reservations the right to commute upon payment of the Indian price for the land. The Department had held that, in addition to this, the settler would have to pay $1.25 an acre.

An act passed in March, 1899, relieved settlers from the payment of anything more than $1.25 an acre when commuting, but it has been held that the act of January, 1901, was not retroactive, and that for lands entered between March, 1899, and January, 1901, settlers would still be required to pay the Indian price in addition to $1.25 an acre. The present bill will affect only a dozen entries of land formerly included in the Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

There being no objection the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands (excepting the amendment to the title) were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the proposed amendment to the title will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

F. M. VOWELLS.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1592) for the relief of F. M. Vowells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the military record of F. M. Vowells, an officer in Company H, Sixth Kentucky Cavalry, during the war of the rebellion, be so corrected and amended that he shall be carried on the rolls of regiment and company as a second lieutenant from July 21, 1863, the date of his commission as such, and that he be paid according to the said corrected roll.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Kentucky, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH SAN FRANCISCO MOUNTAINS FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. LACEY. I desire now to renew the request for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4363) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve. The original bill is now in the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Public Lands from the further consideration of Senate bill 4363.

There was no objection.

The committee was accordingly discharged; and the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. This bill has already been once read.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LOAN OF REVOLUTIONARY TROPHIES.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 172) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, of Winchester, Va., certain Revolutionary trophies at Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa., was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to loan to the Morgan Memorial Association, Winchester, Va., the two 24-pounder boat howitzers, English (bronze), without carriages, relics of the Revolutionary war, now at the Allegheny Arsenal, Pittsburg, Pa., to be placed at the grave of Gen. Daniel Morgan.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EMANUEL KLAUSER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 3732, entitled "An act for the relief of Emanuel Klauser."

This bill is similar to that in the case of James W. Howell, Senate bill No. 24, which was recently returned by me without my approval. The Howell bill did not merely authorize the President to take action, but it ordered the Secretary of War to revoke and set aside the order approving the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a general court-martial, and to grant an honorable discharge. It appeared to imply the possession by Congress of the power of overruling and reversing by statute a valid judgment. If it did not do that, it was simply an exercise of the pardoning power. It is questionable whether Congress possesses either of those powers, and when the bill directed the Secretary of War to revoke an order, Congress in fact did the thing which it ordered him to do.

The reasons for the action taken in the Howell case appear to me to be equally applicable in the present instance.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 23, 1902.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the subcommittee that has had this bill in charge is not present, and as I have no knowledge whatever of the matter, I move that this message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ALIDA PAYNE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10486) granting a pension to Alida Payne, with an amendment of the Senate.

The amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

HANNAH P. KNOWLES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 11418) granting an increase of pension to Hannah P. Knowles, with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.
The motion was agreed to.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in their order under the rule for this day.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair, for consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar under the rule.

CALVIN A. RICE.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 3379) to correct the military record of Calvin A. Rice.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to correct the military record of Calvin A. Rice.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard read a message from the President of the United States, in which he vetoes a bill of this kind to remove a charge of desertion, and in view of the fact that he has taken that position, a position in which I agree with him, while I differ with him in most everything else, it seems to me that it would be useless for this House to continue to pass these bills. We had better displace them and let other and more meritorious bills be considered and clear the Calendar. I have looked over the Calendar, and I see on it a good many bills for the removal of the charge of desertion, to correct the military record, and to set aside verdicts of military courts.

Now, I desire as part of my remarks to insert Senate Document No. 244, which is a veto message from the President of the United States, vetoing an act to remove a charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass. I will not take the time to read it. I will read only a short extract from it. After going on to say that no greater crime exists than that of desertion, the President says:

Under such circumstances it seems to me that to remove the charge of desertion from the Navy and give him an honorable discharge would be to falsify the records and do an injustice to his gallant and worthy comrades who fought the war to a finish. The names of the veterans who fought in the civil war make the honor list of the Republic, and I am not willing to put upon it the name of a man unworthy of the high position.

Comment is unnecessary. That language is as plain and as unmistakable as it can be made, and I am glad to see that I have at last had come to my assistance the Chief Executive of this great nation in preventing placing upon the roll of honor deserters, men who deserve nothing at the hands of the people who pay the taxes of this great nation. [Applause.]

I desire also to insert as a part of my remarks Senate Document No. 257, which contains a veto message from the President of the United States upon a bill referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, an act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley. After saying other things, the President concludes it by this language:

I think it in the highest degree inexpedient to reverse the order of dismissal nearly forty years after the event, when it is out of the question for anyone to possess the knowledge and the means of arriving at the judgment which was possessed by the fellow-officers of the man at the time they dismissed him.

That is also unmistakable language—plain and patriotic—that can not be misunderstood, and I want to call the attention of this House and of the country to it once more.

I also want to insert as a part of my remarks Senate Document No. 258, which is a message from the President of the United States, returning with his objections the bill (S. 24) for the relief of James W. Howell. I will not read the whole of it, but will read one extract. After saying a good many other things, the President concludes it by this language:

There is perhaps no other heritage an American would so like to leave to his children as an honorable discharge for services well and gallantly performed in the civil war; and the honorable discharge thus granted to those who with blood and toil have earned it is cheapened and rendered of little worth if also granted to their unworthy brothers who have forfeited the right to receive it.

That is also plain and unmistakable language.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want now to read an article that appeared two or three days ago in the Washington Post along that same line:

DESERTERS TO FIND NO FAVOR—PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT DECLARES HIS OPPOSITION TO THEIR RESTORATION TO ROLLS.

President Roosevelt declared yesterday that so long as he is in office no deserter from the Army or Navy would find favor with him. The statement was made to Capt. Frank Bruner and Ferd. McDonough, of Lytle Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Cincinnati, who handed him a set of resolutions from the ex-Union soldiers of Cincinnati, condemning the restoration of deserters to the rolls and approving his course in vetoing certain bills recently passed by Congress.

They also arranged to present to the President at the next annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic the resolutions passed by Lytle Post, thanking him for the stand he has taken in giving preference to civil-war veterans in the matter of appointments.

Now, that shows that the Grand Army men themselves are opposed to having shame and disgrace cast like a shadow over this roll by placing upon it, by the side of honest, patriotic soldiers, coffee coolers, bounty jumpers, and deserters.

I only desired in the outset of the consideration of the bills to-day to call the attention of this House and the country once more, as I have often done, to the fact that we are doing wrong when we continue this practice of removing the charge of desertion at this late day. I want to say that I have looked generally over every pension bill upon this Calendar, and when I see that a man comes up here and wants to take up the time that should be given to the consideration of meritorious bills I am opposed to it. I only submit these remarks, Mr. Chairman, and the House can do as it pleases with regard to the bill now before it.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes.

Mr. JETT. I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he does not think the President took his cue from your position for the last ten years on this question?

Mr. TALBERT. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. JETT. Do you not think the President has taken his cue from your views in the last ten years?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not know. The dullest man in the country can be influenced by line upon line and precept upon precept, and I have certainly continued along this line in my humble way. Yet I will not claim any such thing, even in a joke, for fear that my friend from Missouri might get mad about it again. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table, because if it should pass here the President will certainly veto it, and thus we shall have wasted our time. Let us go on and pass these meritorious bills which are upon the Calendar to-day.

Mr. PARKER. Does the gentleman suppose that this is a desertion case?

Mr. TALBERT. It is to correct a military record or to set aside the verdict of a court. Now, the gentleman ought not to get upon false premises himself.

Mr. PARKER. Do not you get on false premises.

Mr. TALBERT. He claims to be a lawyer, or the son of a lawyer, one or the other, or both, I do not know which.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TALBERT. Why, certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Has the gentleman read the report in this case?

Mr. TALBERT. Yes, sir; I have read the reports in almost all of these cases. I do not know that I have read every report.

Mr. PARKER. Has the gentleman read this report?

Mr. TALBERT. Did the gentleman ever read the Lord's Prayer or repeat it? [Laughter.]

Mr. PARKER. Do you know anything about the facts in this case?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not know that I have read every case. I am not supposed to know. A wayfaring man, though a fool, may see some things without looking into them.

I here insert for the information of the public the three following veto messages signed by the President:

[Senate Document No. 244, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

JOHN GLASS.

Veto message from the President of the United States, returning to the Senate, with his objections, the bill (S. 1258) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass.

MARCH 11, 1902.—Read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1258, entitled "An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of John Glass."

There can be no graver crime than the crime of desertion from the Army or Navy, especially during war. It is then high treason to the nation and is justly punishable by death. No man should be relieved from such a crime, especially when nearly forty years have passed since it occurred, save on the clearest possible proof of his real innocence. In this case the statement made by the affiant before the committee does not in all points agree with his statement made to the Secretary of the Navy.

In any event it is incomprehensible to me that he should not have made effective effort to get back into the Navy. He had served but little more than a month when he deserted, and the war lasted for over a year afterwards, yet he made no effort whatever to get back into the war. Under such circumstances it seems to me that to remove the charge of desertion from the Navy and give him an honorable discharge would be to falsify the records and do an injustice to his gallant and worthy comrades who fought the war to a finish. The names of the veterans who fought in the civil war make the honor list of the Republic, and I am not willing to put upon it the name of a man unworthy of the high position.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 11, 1902.

[Senate Document No. 257, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

CHARLES H. HAWLEY.

Message from the President of the United States, returning, with his objections, the bill (S. 336) entitled "An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley."

MARCH 18, 1902.—Read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

Senate bill No. 336, entitled "An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Charles H. Hawley," is herewith returned without approval.

This is a mandatory bill, revoking the order of dismissal issued thirty-nine years ago, and directing the issuance of an honorable discharge from the Army to this man, whom his superior officers, including the Commander in Chief, Abraham Lincoln, held to be unworthy to serve in the Army of the Union thirty-nine years ago. I do not at this time express an opinion upon the constitutional questions involved in the bill. I think it in the highest degree inexpedient to reverse the order of dismissal nearly forty years after the event, when it is out of the question for anyone to possess the knowledge and the means of arriving at the judgment which was possessed by the fellow-officers of the man at the time they dismissed him.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1902.

[Senate Document No. 258, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

JAMES W. HOWELL.

Message from the President of the United States, returning, with his objections, the bill (S. 24) entitled "An act for the relief of James W. Howell."

MARCH 18, 1902.—Read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

Senate bill No. 24, entitled "An act for the relief of James W. Howell," is herewith returned without approval.

This is not a bill which confers jurisdiction. It is mandatory in its character, directing the Secretary of War to revoke and set aside the proceedings, findings, and sentence of a court-martial held thirty-seven years ago. I do not at this time express an opinion upon the constitutional questions involved in the bill. It is enough to say that this man was convicted of mutiny, sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the Army, and confined at hard labor for a term of years. A portion of the confinement was remitted by Executive clemency.

It is to the last degree improbable that now, thirty-seven years after the event, there is as good an opportunity to pass judgment upon the facts as was the case when the fellow-officers of the offender found him guilty of an offense so serious as to call for the punishment they inflicted. There is perhaps no other heritage an American would so like to leave to his children as an honorable discharge for services well and gallantly performed in the civil war; and the honorable discharge thus granted to those who with blood and toil have earned it is cheapened and rendered of little worth if also granted to their unworthy brothers who have forfeited the right to receive it.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 15, 1902.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina admits that he has not read the report in this case and knows nothing of the case. I am satisfied that had he read the report and studied the case as the Committee on Military Affairs has studied it he would be willing for them to bring in a favorable report. This is not a case of desertion. It is clearly shown by the official records that this officer never deserted. In 1862, on general orders, he was sent to New York on recruiting service. While there, by error, as clearly shown by the official record, he was marked as absent without leave. It subsequently developed that this officer was on duty at the time, and the order of dismissal was revoked by the assistant adjutant-general on January 8, 1863, but, unfortunately, in the meantime the vacancy existing by reason of the officer's dismissal had been filled, and there was no authority in the War Department to restore him to his rank, the place having been filled. The Record and Pension Bureau of the War Department says in this case:

The order of dismissal in this case having been carried into execution, and the officer thereby finally separated from the service, it is beyond the power of any executive officer of the Government to revoke, modify, or set it aside, however unmerited or injudicious that order may be deemed to have been, or to issue for Captain Rice an honorable discharge.

It is clearly indicated by the official records—and I will not take the time of the House to read them in full—that the man was on active duty at the time the order of dismissal was issued; that this matter was brought to the attention of the officials of the War Department; that the order of dismissal was revoked; but, unfortunately, his place having been filled in the ranks, it was beyond the power of the War Department to restore him. And at this late day, after this officer had suffered long years unjustly, I believe it the duty of this House to grant him an honorable discharge—all that is asked in this bill.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask whether the gentleman sought to be restored at the time?

Mr. MONDELL. The officer evidently endeavored to be restored at the time, and, as I have said, an order revoking the order of dismissal and restoring him as captain to command, if a vacancy existed, was issued on the 8th of January, 1863.

Mr. STEELE. By whom?

Mr. MONDELL. By the Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army.

Mr. STEELE. Read what he says.

Mr. MONDELL. I will ask for the reading of the entire report.

Mr. STEELE. Just read what the Adjutant-General says.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is not a proper subject for consideration at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. I will read briefly.

Mr. STEELE. Just read the letter of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say that the gentleman had considerable length of time to discuss the general subject, and I am talking about the bill.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would like to have a ruling on the point of order. We are in Committee of the Whole House under the rule, and I do not think we can enlarge that rule by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will rule that, this being a case that changes the military record, not being a case of desertion, it ought not to be considered at this time; but the question having been debated to the length it has, the Chair will be compelled to hold that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. MONDELL. I read the concluding paragraph of the Adjutant-General's report:

I respectfully and most earnestly request that he be reinstated and permitted to continue on duty here at the depot, thus doing justice to a meritorious officer, as well as contributing to the public interests.

And there is considerable more of the same sort.

Another paragraph of the Adjutant-General's letter is this:

Had the circumstances been known at the date of reported absence without authority, Major Sprague would undoubtedly have been called on for a report, and this officer would not have been dismissed.

Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the bill. The statements made a moment ago in reference to the remarks of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] were based, I think, upon a better knowledge of the facts of the case than he possessed. I did not want it to appear in the RECORD that I was here championing the cause of deserters; but the case to which he referred was not a case of desertion at all. It was a case of setting aside the findings of a court-martial in the case of James W. Howard, a case I consider one of the most meritorious of any that has gone through the House. Mr. Howard was a faithful soldier, served something over three years in the civil war, was in many great battles of the war, and rendered efficient service. At the close of the term of enlisted men, but before his discharge had been issued, he was ordered to march in a procession with other members of the company to hear a Fourth of July oration, to be delivered by a man he had no respect for. Considering his term of enlistment had expired, the captain of the company had no right to order him to march in the procession, and, with a number of others in like condition, he refused to go.

For that offense he was jerked up before a court-martial and tried on a charge of mutiny, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary, and put there with a ball and chain.

After having been in prison for some months he managed to get the case before the Secretary of War and the President of the United States, and the remainder of the sentence was commuted, and they were set at liberty. But the charge still remained against him, and the finding of the court-martial still remained against him. The Senate three different times passed the bill to correct that finding. The House Committee on Military Affairs has three times reported in favor of that bill. At last the Senate and House both passed the bill and sent it to the President of the United States. The President has returned it with his veto.

The general remarks made in his veto message I entirely approve, but I do not believe that either the gentleman from South Carolina or the President in writing his veto was fully acquainted with the facts of the case. I can not believe that even the President of the United States would have written such a veto message if he had been fully acquainted with the facts in the case. That is all I desire to say, and I do it in entire good humor with my friend from South Carolina. I feel sure that if he had fully investigated the case he would have been in favor of the bill itself.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reply to what my friend from Wyoming has said about not reading the report. The gentleman knows I have stood on the floor time after time and requested that the reports all be read in the hearing of the House, so that men could have intelligent appreciation of every bill that is brought in here from the Pension Committee and the Military Committee. But the House has run roughshod over my request in that line, and I have examined as far as I could the numerous bills and read most of the reports.

But the point I rose to make, Mr. Chairman, this morning was simply this: In view of the fact that the President of the United States has taken a decided stand against the passage of such bills, it is a useless waste of time to pass them through the House, because he will send every one of them back with a veto message. In view of that fact, I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the utter uselessness of passing these bills. We might lay them aside and proceed with the consideration of other meritorious bills of old soldiers who were true, who stood by the flag as long as they could, and their widows after them. That is the point I want to make, and if this committee wants to overrule me, let them do it. I only want to clear my conscience and show the country that I for one stand here in opposition to such legislation. That is the point I wish to make, and my remarks have applied to no particular case, but broadcast against removing charges of desertion at this late day, and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from South Carolina think that because the President of the United States takes any position upon any subject of legislation that we should thereupon abrogate our powers to him?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not think any such thing, and the gentleman from Virginia knows that the gentleman from South Carolina does not think any such thing. He knows that because I said it was about the only thing that he has done that I agreed with him—that is, vetoing deserters' bills. When a man takes the proper position, if it is the devil, I will agree with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman agrees with the President, all right. I thought he said that because the President had taken that position it was no use for us to legislate any further.

Mr. TALBERT. I agree with the President in his vetoing the bills on charges of desertion; and he having taken that position, I say it is useless for us to take up the time that should be given to meritorious bills of soldiers in discussing and considering these bills. Since we have been discussing this measure we could have passed 40 deserving ones.

Mr. HAY. Has the gentleman any information that the President will veto all the bills for desertion?

Mr. TALBERT. Certainly. I read a piece from the Post of this morning, and from the statements in that article he has no consideration for a deserter, and will continue to veto the bills. This is his position, if I understand the English language.

Mr. HAY. Has the gentleman any information, or does he believe that the President would veto—

Mr. TALBERT. I have no information on that subject, because I never have been about the President and do not know that I shall be, because I do not like him and his ways. The gentleman may have been crawling around him a good deal, but I have not.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is very much mistaken. His remark is uncalled for.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I withdraw it if it does not fit the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that I do not "crawl around" anybody.

Mr. TALBERT. But let the gentleman not try to put me in a false position, for he ought to know that I am not fond of the White House at all.

Mr. HAY. I am not trying to do so.

Mr. TALBERT. It does seem to me that the gentleman is trying to do that, by his insinuations.

Mr. HAY. Not at all.

Mr. TALBERT. Of course I am not in harmony with everything that President Roosevelt has done, by a long sight. I have said that in this particular case he has done about the only thing in which I have ever agreed with him.

Mr. HAY. I was trying to ask the gentleman a question, but he would not let me finish it.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, go on.

Mr. HAY. My question was whether the gentleman believed, or had any information leading him to believe, that the President would veto a meritorious bill?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not believe that the President thinks there is any merit in desertion. [Laughter.] I certainly do not think so.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman from South Carolina has stated, as I understand, that it would be useless for the House to pass these bills, because the President would veto every one of them. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he is acquainted with the fact that the President signed a desertion bill yesterday?

Mr. TALBERT. I would not be astonished at anything he might do, in view of some things he has done. The gentleman understands, of course, that Republicans are often very peculiar in their ways. I am not astonished at anything they do. I simply took the President at his word. If he has gone back on it already, I will part company with him again right away. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it might be very well if this House or this Committee of the Whole should consider the attitude of the President in this matter. It will not do to say the President had his duty to perform, and Congress its duty to perform, and therefore we shall pass the bill in whatever form we please and run the risk of a veto. We must appreciate the fact that if we pass bills it is for the purpose of having them enacted into law.

Now, the President has not taken the position that he will veto all desertion bills that are passed by Congress. The position he has clearly indicated in the two veto messages he has sent to the Senate is that a desertion bill, or a bill to correct the record of an officer or private, should be a bill permitting the War Department to correct the record—not a bill requiring that to be done.

The form of the bill which has been adopted by the House in these cases is a bill directing the War Department to correct the record. Now, in these meritorious cases, like the one which is now before the House, the War Department is undoubtedly willing to correct the record. Would it not be the part of good legislation on our part to amend the bill in such a case so that it will simply permit the War Department to correct the error in the record—not direct it to do so. In some cases the President and the Department might not think the proposed correction a proper one. The position of the President is that the matter must be left in the discretion of the Department.

Now, we may say that we do not agree with that position; but if we take that position and refuse to modify the form of our bills, we might as well quit passing these bills, because the President has clearly indicated his intention to veto every bill which requires the Department, without any discretion on its part or on the part of the President, to change the record of the Department. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether he is not willing to put this bill in such a form as will meet the approval of the President?

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has called attention to the fact that the President has signed a bill making a change in a military record. But, Mr. Chairman, that bill, after it had been vetoed, was put in the permissive form. We made the change in that case, and the bill has met the approval of the President. Why not make the change in all these cases, and not endeavor to run counter—

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. The suggestion of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is new to me; and it strikes me very strongly. At the same time I see one very great difficulty in regard to following it. If bills introduced here for the purpose of correcting the military record of soldiers do not advise or request the change, but simply permitted it, may not that fact be made an excuse for urging upon the House that all these bills be passed without consideration? I see that some discretion should be left to the War Department; but at the same time it seems to me that we should never pass a bill of this kind through the House unless we are prepared to request, under the circumstances, that the action contemplated by us be taken by the Department, if it be right.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am very much inclined to agree with my friend from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], but here are two veto messages from the President of the United States, who, in the performance of his duty, has the right to say that he will not sign a bill in a particular form. Undoubtedly, as I suppose, he has taken that action upon the recommendation of the War Department. I do not assume that he vetoed a bill without the approbation of the Department concerning which the bill related to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman seems to lose sight of the fact that this House is a coordinate branch of the Government. Now, if the War Department is directing the President, and if we are subjected to the will of the President, if we are subjected to the will of the Senate, if this body is subjected to the will of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, are we not therefore abdicating our powers as a legislative body if we conform to those views? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be a very easy matter to say that we are abdicating our powers. I say no. We have the power to pass a bill. The President has the power to sign it or veto it, and you might as well say that he is abdicating his powers if he says he is to have no discretion as to the form of the bill. It is abdicating nobody's power. It is the action of two bodies who wish to agree on a result. If the gentleman prefers to pass bills for the mere amusement of passing them, well and good. If he wishes to legislate for the purpose of making laws, then he knows as well as I do that the House and Senate must first agree and then that the President must agree with the two Houses.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But let us act as an independent body representing our constituencies, and then if another branch of the Government fails to agree with us, let the responsibility rest where it should. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman prefers to pass a bill here and have it go to the Senate, and then have the Senate pass it and then go to the President of the United States, and then have him veto it and send it back and then take it up, rather than to in the first place do what the gentleman knows will be proper and pass muster, very well; but it seems to me very much like a waste of time. The point in controversy is not a point of materiality.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman from Illinois feel that if we follow his course we will cease entirely to correct military records and fail in this body to remove any further charge of desertion?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] suggested that if the course suggested by the President be followed it would result in removing too many charges. The gentleman from Indiana suggests that if the same course is followed it would result in removing no charges. I do not know. I apprehend the House can take care of that matter upon each question that comes before it, but I see no objection to the passage of a bill which permits the War Department to remove an erroneous charge against an officer or private in the Army, instead of requiring them to do it.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that this form of bill was taken up and discussed in the House some two or three years ago, and the House then concluded not only to adopt this form, but after the discussion of the use of the word "directed," concluded that that was the proper word to use, that they did not wish to leave it in the discretion of that Department, and that they had a right to say to an executive officer that he must do a certain thing, as a matter of law.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman kindly puts his statement in the form of a question. I am not advised; but I have no doubt, if the gentleman says so, that that is the case.

Mr. COWHERD. That was my recollection, and I just wanted to know whether I was right.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, if he will yield.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. Whether he understands it to be the position of the President of the United States that he will veto all bills of this character that are directory in their form, regardless of their merits?

Mr. MANN. Well, of course I do not know what the President will do, but I know that if the President is consistent he will veto every bill of this character which is directory in form, because the President gave no reason for vetoing the two bills which he has vetoed except the one that it made it directory upon the Department and left them no discretion, and the President did not consider the merits of either of those cases; and, on the contrary, the merit of at least one of the cases so strongly appeals to Congress and the President, so it has been stated here, that since the veto message was sent to Congress the bill has been repassed and has been signed by the President in a permissive form.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask what right the President of the United States has to direct us as to the form in which we shall draw our bills any more than we have the right to direct him what he shall do as to confirming or vetoing a bill? What right has he to tell us that we can not say that the Secretary of War, an executive officer, shall take from the record of A or B any dishonorable charge which this House or this Congress thinks ought to be taken?

Mr. MANN. The right of the President of the United States is derived from the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HAY. To direct this House how to draw its bills?

Mr. MANN. To say that the House can not control an officer or cause to be removed a charge of desertion or correct the military record of one of its old soldiers. The only way that Congress can direct it is by the enactment of a law, and you can not enact a law without giving the President the right to sign the bill or to veto it, and the President's right is a coordinate right with that of Congress. He has the same right to veto that we have to propose, and when we know that he will reject a certain form it seems to me the policy of wisdom and proper legislation to propose a form which he will agree to, when there is, in my opinion, no great difference in the substance.

Mr. SHATTUC. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SHATTUC. My point of order is that it is not proper to refer to the probable action of the President with a view to influencing the action of this House. I raise that point of order, and I ask a decision on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not observed any breach of propriety in that direction. The gentleman will proceed in order, Mr. SHATTUC. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SHATTUC. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman know, as a matter of fact, that there have been no bills for the correction of military records, in the form of the bill now before us, signed by the President?

Mr. MANN. I do not.

Mr. HAY. I can tell the gentleman of one such bill which has been signed by the President, and that is the bill to correct the military record of James L. Proctor.

Mr. MONDELL. I think, as a matter of fact, there have been several bills signed which were in the form of the bill now before the House. That is my impression. I may be mistaken.

Mr. HAY. Has the gentleman read the veto messages to which he refers?

Mr. MANN. I read what purported to be the veto messages, as published in the newspapers.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman know that the President did not base his veto specifically upon the ground of the use of certain words in either the Howell or the Klausner cases, but, as he states in the Klausner case, "it appeared to imply the possession by Congress of the power of overruling and reversing by statute a valid judgment?" In this case there is nothing of the sort. The man was simply marked a deserter in error, and the record should be corrected.

Mr. MANN. My understanding of the message is that the President said it was not proper legislation, in his judgment, for Congress to direct the military branch of the Government to correct a record, but that it should be left so that they might do so if they thought the circumstances justified it.

Mr. HAY. In other words, then, the President says that we have no right to pass a law which will necessarily require or direct an executive officer, but that we must leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of War to correct this military record or not, as he sees fit, notwithstanding our action on the subject.

Mr. MANN. Well, the President, of course, did not say that we did not have the right to direct. The President, in the exercise of his constitutional authority, refused to approve a bill in a particular form, as the President, under his constitutional right, was justified in doing.

Mr. HAY. Does not the gentleman know that we now have a law under which the Secretary of War can remove these charges of desertion and correct military records, if he wants to do it?

Mr. MANN. I know quite the contrary. I know that we have no law granting to the military branch of the Government any authority of the sort. At least I know that I have been frequently told that by letter and in person by the War Department, and the report in this case states the same thing.

Mr. HAY. There is a law in certain special cases. Now, if the contention of the President is true, why do you not pass a general law giving the Secretary of War the discretion?

Mr. MANN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I might agree with the gentleman from Virginia that that might properly be done, but that is not the question before the House.

Mr. HAY. I understand it is not. You want us to take away from this House the power to do what it has been doing for its old soldier constituents and place it in the hands of the Secretary of War, an executive officer.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman states what he says I want to do in language which I did not use. I simply called the attention of the House to what seems to me to be a proper method of procedure in legislation. I called that to the attention of the House and of the friends of the bill, if they are friends of the bill and wish it to become a law.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman let me read to him a bill that has been approved by the President?

Mr. MANN. I should be glad to have him.

Mr. HAY. It is a very short bill:

[Private—No. 181.]

An act to correct the military record of James L. Proctor.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant an honorable discharge in lieu of the dishonorable discharge heretofore granted to James L. Proctor, of the county of Kings, State of New York, late a private in Company F, Ninth Regiment of New York Veteran Volunteers: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Approved, March 20, 1902.

Now, here the President has signed a bill containing these very words. You say that he takes the other position, that as long as the word "directed" is in the bill he will not sign it.

Mr. MANN. I am frank to say it looks to me quite inconsistent with the President's approval of that bill.

Mr. HAY. Here it is.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can take his own time if he desires to speak. So far as I am concerned, I have already created much more talk than I had any idea of doing.

Mr. ESCH. I simply desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had just as leave that I retain the floor, I will yield to him.

Mr. ESCH. I wish simply to call your attention to the fact that the bill which the President signed yesterday, removing the charge of desertion against the military record of Stephens A. Toops, uses this language:

The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed.

In line with the case which the gentleman from Virginia also cites.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WANGER. Will not the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion before he concludes?

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman for a suggestion.

Mr. WANGER. I beg to suggest that there is no inconsistency meant on the part of the President when he declared that he would not approve a bill directing a department to take such action as that, the propriety of which he was not himself convinced of, and he was not convinced of the propriety of the action to be taken in this particular case.

Mr. JETT. Let me suggest. In writing each of these veto messages the President does not indicate his position on the merits or, so far as I have been able to see, discuss the facts of either of the particular cases that he has issued a veto message in.

Mr. WANGER. I beg to suggest that he does discuss the facts.

Mr. TALBERT. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. TALBERT. A motion to lay upon the table is not debatable. My motion is to lay on the table, and the committee is wasting all this time when we might be considering bills for the old soldiers. My motion is to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. MANN. To the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina I make the point of order that a motion to lay a bill on the table in the Committee of the Whole House is out of order.

Mr. TALBERT. Now the gentleman is out of order. That is the only motion he can make. My motion is that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. That motion is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state—

Mr. TALBERT. Let me state the point of order. I moved that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that motion now?

Mr. TALBERT. I did make it before, but gentlemen were so much taken up with something else that it may not have been heard. I maintain that motion is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in the first of his remarks the gentleman from South Carolina did say that he made this motion—that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table—but before the Chair had an opportunity to put that question to the House and state that that was the motion before the House the gentleman from South Carolina, because of interruptions perhaps, went on with his remarks. Therefore, the motion of the gentleman not having been recognized by the Chair, the Chair does not recognize it as having been made, and the gentleman from Illinois has the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I made a motion, supposed to be an amendatory motion to that of the gentleman from South Carolina, to the effect that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. If the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina was not entertained, then I make my motion as the first and principal motion. I can not agree with the views of the gentleman from Illinois. In the first place, I do not believe it would be wise for the House to depart from the use of the language that has been used for many years in cases of this character.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment until the Chair has an opportunity to state that the question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

Mr. MONDELL. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War, in my opinion, has authority at the present time to correct military records in some cases which are referred to Congress. I believe it is now within the power of the Secretary of War, part of his authority, to correct the military record of the man whose case is now before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the motion of the gentleman will prevent further debate upon this question, debate having been exhausted on that motion.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman from Illinois had the floor, and that he yielded to me the balance of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair entertained the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming; therefore, as soon as the gentleman from Illinois had taken his seat, general debate was closed.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Chairman, that I be allowed to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman in this particular case; but why not pass a law giving the War Department the power to correct the records in these meritorious cases where the charge of desertion should be removed and the record corrected?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe the War Department already has the power to remove the charge of desertion. In most of the cases reported by the Committee on Military Affairs in this House we have cases where it has been clearly proven that men have died on the battlefield from wounds received in the service of their country, where comrades saw them die and saw them buried, and where a charge of desertion is clearly an error in the record, where there is no question as to the power of the War Department to remove that charge of desertion; and yet, for all these years charges of desertion have rested against the names of good men who gave up their lives to their country. And inasmuch as the War Department has not seen fit to correct the record in that class of cases and in this case, where I believe they have the right and authority to do it, this House should direct that justice be done.

Mr. BOREING. Does it not turn upon the fact as to what evidence the War Department will consider?

Mr. MONDELL. If the War Department says that the testimony in this case was not sufficient, I will say to the gentleman that in many of the cases the evidence is such as would decide a case in any court of justice in the country.

Mr. BOREING. But the gentleman does not quite understand me. As I understand, the War Department will only consider the record evidence—that they have declined to entertain parole evidence.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that in a case that came before the committee a short time ago the records of the War Department indicated that the man had never deserted. It is a matter of fact that the records of the War Department indicate that the man was taken out of the service by a writ of habeas corpus, recognized by the law; and yet, because some clerk somewhere, at some time, had written opposite the name of that man a charge of desertion, the War Department refused to remove it, although the records themselves clearly proved that the charge was an unjust one.

Mr. BOREING. I want it understood that I quite agree with the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. My information from the War Department has been that it is not that they object to the words "direct" or "request," but the point they have objected to is that the particular form they have always used in the House is that we direct a change to be made in a record already made up years ago. My understanding was that if we would change the form of our bills so as to issue to the soldier a certificate of discharge now, or at the time of its passage, to have the effect as though it was an honorable discharge dating back to that time, there would be no objection to such a bill. I think, if the gentleman will permit me to say, that when the House has heard the evidence and passed upon it and says that the soldier is entitled to a discharge, we ought to have the bill in the proper form, and not only authorize it, but have the power to direct it, so that we will not have to follow it up afterwards with other facts.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say that I do not believe that the form in which this bill is drawn, or the form in which most of them are drawn, is a happy one. I will say, also, that if the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, the subcommittee of which I am chairman, having charge of this matter, find any meritorious cases in the hundreds that we have before us in the future, we propose, as we did in the last case, to report a change in phraseology, and provide that the man shall receive an honorable discharge and that the record be corrected. I believe that is the better form.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. After a conversation with Colonel Ainsworth, who seems to know as much about this, and who was expecting this class of bills to be vetoed—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The objection that Colonel Ainsworth made as to that part of the bill and the Secretary of War's objection was that it directed a change in a record made up years ago, and that the bill ought not to require that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Were not those cases referred to court-martial cases, so that it changed the judgment of the courts-martial?

Mr. KEHOE. That is the whole trouble.

Mr. MONDELL. I agree entirely with Colonel Ainsworth's view as to the form, but there is a considerable amount of misunderstanding and misapprehension as to the President's position in this matter. The bills which have been vetoed, including the veto message which I hold in my hand, were court-martial cases, and the President's objection was to a direction which would absolutely wipe out the judgment.

Mr. KEHOE. And set aside the finding of the court?

Mr. MONDELL. And set aside the findings of the court-martial. His words are:

It appears to imply the position of Congress the power of overruling and reversing by statute a valid judgment.

It is clearly proven by all the cases which have been reported by the committee where there was a charge of desertion that there was no valid judgment; that as a matter of fact the charge of desertion was an error, and the majority of the cases might have been removed by the War Department itself under the existing law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not the removal of charges such as we are now discussing a legislative act?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe it is.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then what power has Congress to delegate its legislative authority?

Mr. KEHOE. Let me ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to get an answer to my inquiry.

Mr. MONDELL. I have endeavored to make it clear to the House that I believe all these bills, no matter what their form, should contain the word "direct." Is that an answer to the gentleman's question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not that a delegation of legislative power, which can not be done?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not a lawyer and I can not undertake to go into questions of law. As a layman, I believe it is within the power of Congress to direct the removal of the charge of desertion. That is what we have done in these cases where we believed we were justified in doing so.

Mr. KEHOE. Now, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that most of the cases of desertion coming before the gentleman's committee are cases where the men were not tried and where there is no judgment of a court-martial against them?

Mr. MONDELL. That is true. There are very few court-martial cases before the committee.

Mr. KEHOE. Does not the gentleman understand the position of the President to have reference only to cases where there has been a judgment of a court-martial and where Congress has undertaken to set aside the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction? Is not that what the President objects to?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is the President's position as indicated in his veto message.

Now, I simply want to say briefly to the House that the Committee on Military Affairs, having charge of these matters, has been exceedingly careful in the consideration of these cases; that of the hundreds of cases coming before the committee very few have been or will be considered favorably; that where there is one case favorably reported there are hundreds in which the committee recognizes no merit, and cases are adversely reported at every meeting of the committee. We have been exceedingly careful to bring nothing before this House which, as we thought, the House could not in justice support.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONDELL] that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 64, noes 2.

Mr. TALBERT. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN (having counted the Committee of the Whole). There are 123 members present—more than a quorum. The motion of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONDELL] is agreed to, and the bill is laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ABRAM WILLIAMS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2901) to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion borne opposite the name of Abram Williams, formerly a private in Company B, Seventh Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, and to amend the said soldier's military record to show him honorably discharged December 15, 1865, the date of the muster out of the service of the organization in which his service was rendered.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add these words: "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I would like to ask the gentlemen representing the committee why they propose to add that proviso by way of amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. That proviso is attached to all these bills. It does not prevent a man from drawing a pension if he should be found entitled to it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. This man was shot down in battle; he will never draw any pension; and he has no widow. This soldier, as the proof conclusively shows, was found by neighbors, who were brought up with him, with a wound in his side. They saw him dying on board a boat. And yet the Secretary of War declined absolutely to find upon my request that this evidence was true—evidence upon which any court in the world would direct a jury to find in favor of this man.

Now, there is nothing in this case except sentiment. This man has left sons and daughters, who are living in my district. The widow is gone. The man himself is gone. There can be no pension. I submit that this amendment ought not to be made. Why should the Government say, "We will clear the record, which is wrong; we will wipe out this stain upon the memory of this dead soldier, provided no claim shall be made against the Government." I object to the amendment, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, an amendment in this form is added to all these bills. All that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] has said in regard to this soldier is absolutely true. It is the fact that he died from wounds received in the service, and yet has been carried on the rolls all these years as a deserter. I do not believe there is any necessity for the amendment in this case. But the committee has made it a rule to attach an amendment in this form to all bills of this character, and I do not feel authorized to consent in this case to a departure from the ordinary rule.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. If the situation is as the gentleman explains it, I would not have the committee depart from the ordinary rule. I did not understand the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment has no special reference to this case; it is in accordance with the invariable custom of the committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The gentleman from Michigan seems to think that this amendment would prevent an application for pay, bounty, or other emoluments.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; there is no one living to claim any pay, bounty, or emoluments.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The amendment does not provide that no application of that kind shall be made. It simply provides that the passage of the bill shall not carry anything of that kind. It leaves every question of that sort open.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. There is no widow nor are there any children who, under the law, could draw.

Mr. COONEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask this question with reference to the rule the committee has adopted in making this addition to these bills: What reason, if any, exists for the committee adopting such a rule and placing such a proviso in these bills?

Mr. PARKER. May I answer the gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. The reason the provision was put upon all of these bills is the danger that the endeavor to get little amounts of pay, bounty, etc., would result in the bringing of a great many bills before Congress which would not come merely upon their own merits, and the further reason that if there were really any claims for pay, bounty, etc., those claims ought to have been made within the ordinary time of limitation, and not forty years after.

Mr. COONEY. Does the gentleman hold that this provision prevents the person whose record is clear from obtaining a pension and his dues hereafter?

Mr. PARKER. It does not prevent a pension, because that—

Mr. COONEY. It is, then, simply a scarecrow that the committee has put up?

Mr. PARKER. Not at all. It prevents the creation of a claim for bounty which did not exist, but it does not destroy the right to a pension, because that comes from another statute and another state of circumstances.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman in this particular case that this amendment would probably prevent the payment of about three months' pay, which was due the soldier, as I recollect, at the time of his death.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Then, Mr. Chairman, let me submit that since this record is wrongful against this man, who died from a wound received in battle, and his heirs can not get anything—there is no widow nor any children who can get anything out of this—it would be just a little something, and I ask that it be taken off this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why should he not be entitled to pay under these circumstances?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes. His heirs, I submit, are certainly entitled to this money.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says this is entirely a matter of sentiment. I take it for granted it is. There is no thought of making any claim against the Government in this case, and therefore no harm is done by this amendment.

Mr. HAY. I hope the gentleman will not agree to this amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. This amendment has been insisted upon by this House in the past in cases where the amendment was not added in the committee, so that the committee has now adopted a rule to attach this amendment to every case regardless of the merits, because we find that the possibility of the presentation of a claim for $25 or $50 or $75 or $100 may jeopardize a case on the floor of the House, and the friends of this bill certainly would not want to have that done.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Let me submit this, if I may be permitted just for a moment. As I said, this man's sons and daughters are honorable people. They do not want this record of desertion to rest against their father. It is largely a matter of sentiment. Now, I submit it is not fair that this Government should enter into this business of making a bargain with the soldier's children and say "We will clear the record if you will agree or on condition that you shall not present any claim for what this Government honestly owes your father." I ask for a vote on that amendment.

Mr. COONEY. Has this soldier a widow?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; no heir that could be pensioned.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be voted down; that is, the amendment to strike out the amendment which is usually put in by the committee. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH], which is to strike out the proviso. If we begin doing that in one case we will have to continue it in all cases. Now, it has been found wise for a large number of years in the interests of economy—

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. If Congress has done a wrong thing, the fact that it has been doing it for a long time does not correct it, does it?

Mr. HAY. I do not admit it is doing a wrong thing. I am trying to say that it is doing the right thing. It is doing the right thing because if this sort of legislation is indulged in, and the proviso which the committee has always put on these bills is taken off, you open the flood gates here to all sorts of claims for bounty, back pay, pay for a horse, and everything of that sort. This proviso is the result of long experience. It is the result of wisdom, and it is economy, and the honor of the gentleman's constituents will not be in any wise interfered with or hurt by having this amendment on this bill. It is the first time that I have heard the question that this proviso should be taken off and I hope, therefore, that the bill will stand as it was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the committee here has understood the question put by the Chair. The amendment of the committee is to put on this proviso.

Mr. HAY. I understand that the question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PARKER. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I think we ought to vote again on that, and I ask that the vote be taken again.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. After these gentlemen have voted right without intending to do so—

Mr. PARKER. Oh, I voted all right, and I now ask for a division on this matter. The question, as I understand it, is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 13.

Accordingly, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill as amended will be ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. On that I demand a division.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 68, noes none.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHATTUC. I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to know how the gentleman can arrive at that conclusion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is clearly within his right. No quorum has voted, and the Chair will count to ascertain whether a quorum is present.

After counting the House, the Chairman announced 112 members, a quorum, present.

Accordingly, the bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN O'BRIEN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3442) to correct the record of John O'Brien.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records against John O'Brien, late private, Company I, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LEVI L. REED.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10095) for the relief of Levi L. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue an honorable discharge to Levi L. Reed, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALBERT BAKER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2316) to correct the military record of Albert Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Albert Baker, who enlisted as a private in Company H, Eleventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry, for a period of three years; detailed in Battery F, Second United States Artillery, and stands charged with deserting, and grant an honorable discharge to said soldier.

The committee amendments set forth in the report were read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendments.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report in that case read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk began reading the report (by Mr. MONDELL), which is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2316) entitled "A bill to correct the military record of Albert Boker, late private Company H, Eleventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry," report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert: "That Albert Boker shall be held not to have deserted from the military service of the United States as a private of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, but to have been honorably discharged from said service and battery August 7, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by the passage of this bill."

The Committee on Military Affairs made a report in the Fifty-sixth Congress on this case, which report is as follows:

Case of Albert Boker, late of Company H, Eleventh Missouri Infantry, and Battery F, Second United States Artillery.

It is shown by the records that Albert Boker was enrolled July 20, 1861, at Sumner, Ill., and mustered into service August 6, 1861, at St. Louis Arsenal, Mo., as a private in Captain Oldham's company, First Missouri Rifles, to serve three years. The designation of this organization was changed to Company H, Eleventh Missouri Rifles, and again to Company H, Eleventh Missouri Infantry. He is reported present on the muster rolls of his company to May 10, 1862, on which date he was admitted to hospital steamer D. A. January with continued fever. He was admitted to general hospital at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., May 14, 1862, with debility, and was furloughed May 22, 1862. He is reported on the muster roll of his company dated August 31, 1862, as absent on detached service in Company F, Second United States Artillery, since August 1, 1862, and is so borne on subsequent rolls of the company to October 31, 1863. He was discharged to date November 30, 1863, by reason of his reenlistment in Battery F, Second United States Artillery.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN TWEEDALE,
Acting Chief Record and Pension Office.

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,
War Department, February 10, 1900.
THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, February 13, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith H. R. 4021, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, "To correct the military record of Albert Boker," and to invite attention to inclosed report from the Record and Pension Office, War Department, relative to the service of this man in Company H, Eleventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The records of this office show that Private Albert Boker reenlisted December 1, 1863, in Battery F, Second Artillery; deserted August 7, 1865, at Louisville, Ky., while en route from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Baltimore, Md., and never returned to the service.

The Department has no power, under act of Congress of March 2, 1889 (copy inclosed)—the only law relating to the removal of a charge of desertion now in force—to take favorable action in this case.

No evidence has been presented to the Department that would warrant a favorable recommendation on the proposed legislation.

Very respectfully,

H. C. CORBIN,
Adjutant-General.

THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

From this record it is seen that the said soldier, Albert Boker, had a continuous service from August 6, 1861, to August 7, 1865, a period covering four years and one day; that he enlisted as a private in Company H, Eleventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and while performing faithful service as a soldier in said company he was detailed in Company F, Second United States Artillery, where he remained constantly up to August 7, 1865, the date upon which he is charged with deserting; that his only absence from service in line of duty from the first enlistment, in August, 1861, to August, 1865, was during his detention on hospital steamer D. A. January with continued fever, and the period he was detained in the hospital at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., with debility, and the term of his furlough on account of said illness, about three months, all told.

That he voluntarily returned to the service at the expiration of his furlough, evidencing his loyal intention.

The plain, frank statement of the soldier, corroborated by the War Department, shows how he happened to be marked as a deserter. He says that he, with his battery, was ordered from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Baltimore, Md., as the soldier understood, to be mustered out; that the war being over, army discipline was somewhat lax, and while at Louisville, Ky., en route to Baltimore, he found congenial associates in the person of many comrades already mustered out.

That he failed to receive notice of the hour of the departure from Louisville of the battery to which he belonged, and hence was left behind. So soon as he learned that the battery had left he took passage on the first boat, following them to Cincinnati, Ohio, hoping to intercept them there. Failing in this, and not having the money with which to pay his transportation to Baltimore, the war being over, and feeling that his services were no longer needed, he remained with his brother, who was married and living there, that being the nearest a home he then possessed.

The following are affidavits of comrades attesting to his worth as a soldier and of citizens speaking of his high standing as a citizen before and since the war:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Crawford County, ss:

William W. Boatwright, being duly sworn, on his oath states that he is a resident of the city of Sullivan, Ind.; that he was a lieutenant and captain in Company H, Eleventh Missouri Volunteer Infantry, from the 20th day of July, 1861, to the 20th day of March, A. D. 1864; that he was personally acquainted with Albert Boker, a private of said Company H, Eleventh Missouri, and knew him well as a member of said company; that in 1862, as affiant remembers, in July or August, affiant was ordered by his regimental commander to detail three men to go to the First United States Artillery, and that he detailed said Albert Boker as one of these three men; that said Boker was an exceptionally good soldier and that on account of this fact he was selected on this detail; that affiant saw said Boker frequently after he was placed on this detail, during the war, up to about 1864, when affiant last remembers having seen him in line of service; that affiant has known said Boker personally ever since the war, and knows him to be a good citizen, as he was a good soldier. Affiant further states that he was personally acquainted with said Albert Boker before the war, as well as since, and that said Boker has ever demeaned himself, to the knowledge of affiant, as a worthy citizen.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Richland County, ss:

Joseph Fahrenbaker, a resident of Junction, Gallatin County, Ill., aged 58 years, being duly sworn, on oath says that he was a private of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, from about June, 1862, up to 1st day of December, 1863; discharged at Vancouver, Washington State. Affiant was first a private in Company E, Eleventh Missouri, and was detached for service in the battery as aforesaid. Albert Boker was also a private in Company H, Eleventh Missouri, and was detached for service in the said battery at the same time that affiant was, and the said Albert Boker served in the said battery with affiant up to about August, 1865, when affiant did not see him afterwards. The command was going from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Maryland, and the last affiant saw of him was at Louisville, Ky. At Louisville a number of the company got left behind and did not again catch up with the command until it had got to Parkersburg, W. Va., but the said Albert Boker, who was also left behind, did not rejoin his command.

The battery saw no more active service after Boker left, and was soon transferred from Baltimore to California. Affiant is free to say that during the entire time that said Boker was in the said service he was one of the best members of the battery—always ready for duty, never sick, and one of the most loyal men to the United States Government that affiant ever became acquainted with. Affiant is satisfied that said Boker had no intention of deserting his command at Louisville, but in all probability drank a little too much, and, when he came to, his command had departed and he could not follow.

Affiant has no interest in this case and is not related in any way to said Albert Boker.

JOSEPH FAHRENBAKER.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of October, A. D. 1899, and I certify that the above affidavit was read over to affiant before he signed the same, and that he was made acquainted with its contents, and that I am not interested in the claim.

That he has married in this county and raised a family, and is now engaged in an honorable occupation; that from what this affiant knows of the service of the said Boker during the war he is confident that he never intended to desert the Army; that he was ever ready to do his duty. This affiant makes this affidavit that he may aid the said Albert Boker to secure an honorable discharge from military service of the United States, which he, the said Boker, in the opinion of this affiant, is justly entitled to. That this affiant now resides in the city of Robinson, county of Crawford, and State of Illinois, and has been resident of said city since about the year of 1845.

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks, but inasmuch as the hour is far advanced, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago I had occasion to make some remarks upon the subject of private pension legislation. I showed by the report of the Commissioner of Pensions that during the months of January and February, 1901, there was passed by the House in the four days in which such bills were considered 707 private pension bills; that 465 of these were for increases. Four hundred and sixty-five of these bills were to increase pensions for soldiers whose claims had all been considered by the Pension Bureau, and had received the highest pension given them by the general law.

I further showed that there was no uniformity in the amount of increases carried by the several bills; that in those four days there had been passed on an average 177 private pension bills each day; that in passing so many bills in so short a time it was was impossible to give them proper consideration; that, in fact, no consideration was given those bills in the House. I complained against such hasty action by the House in passing private pension bills.

On the 15th day of this month (March) I read to the House in my time as part of my remarks the following letter from an ex-Union soldier of long service:

CAMDEN, N. J., March 8, 1902.

Hon. T. W. SIMS.

MY DEAR SIR: As a long-term soldier of the civil war, and as a member of the pension committee of the Union Veteran Legion, I desire to thank you on behalf of my comrades on the manly, patriotic stand you have taken against political favoritism in the granting of pensions.

It is time somebody had told the truth about the pension question. Favoritism prevails to such an extent that the veteran has come to regard his pension more as a political perquisite than as a Government reward. I can not think it was ever the intent of the people of this country, in their desire to assist the veterans, that it should become part of the "spoils" system of party machinery.

I have recently made a pretty thorough analysis of the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions and am amazed at the inequality and injustice that is apparent. The most vicious feature, of course, is the special-act pensions, by which men with no service record and no pensionable status receive larger pensions through political influence than the deserving veteran who has to depend on the merits of his case alone. To the faithful soldier of the civil war the present system of granting pensions is a humiliation and an insult. In the first place, he is regarded as an imposter and perjurer and the burden of proof to the contrary is placed on him. He is subjected to expenses and tedious delay and examinations by boards whose reports are discredited by the Commissioner of Pensions, as per page 67 of his report. The pension system could be simplified and millions of expense saved by a law granting a specified amount and simply requiring the applicant to prove his identity with the name on the original enrollment on file in the War Department. The time has come when this could be done without regard to disability of claimant, as any man 60 or more years of age is physically incapacitated from hard manual labor.

One great evil of the favoritism shown is the fact that those who receive pensions in that way no longer have any interest in the thousands of their deserving comrades. They have got their pull, and every vestige of fraternal interest and comradeship is lost sight of in their selfish success, and they do not want the pension question discussed for fear it may imperil their political perquisite. On behalf of my comrades I protest against paying the widow of any President $5,000 per year without regard to her income, while the widows of the common soldiers, faithful, loyal, devoted wives and mothers as the Lord ever permitted to live, are paid $3 per month after declaring an income of less than $250 per year.

And I am speaking on behalf of tens of thousands of my comrades when I say that we would rather see the entire pension system abolished than see it abused by and through political favoritism.

My great interest in this question is my apology for trespassing on your valuable time.

With kind regards, yours, truly,

H. M. AVIS.

941 Cooper Street, Camden, N. J.

(Late Company F, Twelfth New Jersey Volunteers, civil war.)

Immediately the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] arose and as part of his remarks made use of the following language:

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word upon the letter that has just been read at the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS]. The sentiments expressed in the letter are the legitimate fruit of the speech that was made which called it forth. At the time that speech was made a large part of the remarks were addressed to the criticism of the work of the Invalid Pensions Committee. As a member of that committee during the last Congress and during this Congress, I have never known any bill to pass the committee by reason of political favoritism, and if the gentleman himself adopts the language of the letter and makes that accusation against the committee he does injustice to himself and also does injustice to the committee. Bills that are passed by the Invalid Pensions Committee receive as fair consideration at the hands of as honorable men as any other bills that are passed by any committee in this House, and I think no gentleman is better aware of that fact than the gentleman from Tennessee.

The gentleman seemed to think that the writer of the letter was unduly criticising the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. Chairman, I can not see that this letter or that my speech makes any reflection on that committee. I have no idea that the committee knows the politics of the soldiers whose pensions are increased by these bills, but that does not prevent political favoritism being practiced. The committee, in reporting bills, act on such bills as are pointed out by the members of the House who introduce them.

When a Republican member of this House has introduced as many as 50 bills and he can only get four or five reported and passed, does anyone suppose he will not single out bills for Republicans? I have not a doubt of it. Then, on the other hand, a Democrat will do exactly the same thing. In this way political favoritism is shown, but not by the committee as such. This can not be prevented, however unjust it may be.

In the speech I made criticising the hasty action of the House in passing 177 bills at one session I believed the high-water mark had been reached, but, Mr. Chairman, on the day the above letter was read as part of my remarks the House was called to order at the usual time—12 o'clock—and adjourned at 3.31 p. m., making the session only three and one-half hours in length, with prayer, the reading of the Journal, and some other business transacted, there was considered in the Committee of the Whole and passed in the House 229 bills. The House was in session two hundred and eleven minutes and passed 229 bills, being one bill for every minute of its entire session and 18 over. So it might be argued that my speech and the letter I had read had fallen on dull ears. No one will be so rash as to contend that bills passed in that way receive the slightest possible consideration by the House.

Mr. Chairman, I have received too many letters like the one above read, regarding that speech, to take the time of the House to read them. I must admit that I had but little hope that what I then said would have any effect on this House, but I did hope that the people would have their eyes opened to what their representatives were doing. Mr. Chairman, I now read an extract from a newspaper—the Placer County Leader—published at Auburn, Placer County, Cal., as follows:

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

Representative SIMS, of Tennessee, is claiming and rightfully urging that this business of passing private pension bills by Congress should be stopped. If a case occurs where the Pension Bureau finds the law will not warrant a just plea for grant or for increase, let the Bureau report the case to Congress for a remedy, general or special; but stop this indiscriminate passage of private pensions by Congress. There were on the rolls on the 1st of July, 1901, 997,735 pensioners, or 4,206 increase (notwithstanding the decrease by death of civil-war veterans). In the past three months Congress has introduced 5,672 private pension bills. Some members have introduced as high as 200, and increases have been granted out of all apparent proportion to the disability sustained. (From CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

We believe Mr. SIMS is clearly right. It is true that many a man who went in to fight rather than to make a big hospital record has been unable to secure the necessary evidence "at time of injury" through scattering or death of comrades or officers.

That was the experience of one we knew, who having laid claim for a specific injury at a specified time and place must prove that in each point. Had he procured a nice hospital record then and there, and claimed on that, he might perhaps have fared better than the $1 a month for the first seventeen years and $2 for two years. After nineteen years futile search for proof his Congressman went to the Pension Commissioner with "I want to know where the 'stick' is!" The Bureau sent the man "information which may enable you to perfect your claim." That only living "information" was but 40 miles away, and he got it within twenty-four hours. Now, we honestly believe that such result would occur from conference of Congressmen with the Pension Bureau, and claimants would get what the law allows, neither more nor less, and that is all anyone should ask.

This newspaper is Republican in politics. I do not know the owner or editor. This paper can not have any personal or political interest in me, and certainly no motive in saying what it has other than an honest expression of its views.

Mr. Chairman, I now read an editorial from the Washington Post of to-day, March 28, 1902, as follows:

SPECIAL PENSION LEGISLATION.

Would it be impossible for Congress to frame and enact a general military pension law under which all applications for such pensions could be finally and fairly disposed of by the Pension Bureau? That Bureau is provided with all the agencies that would appear to be requisite for such service. Medical science and the legal profession have been drawn upon for a large and costly equipment of examiners and reviewers and re-reviewers.

The great machine is running under various acts of Congress, presumably intended to cover all cases, and nevertheless Congress continues to be the arbiter upon a large and ever-increasing number of applications. This fact evidences defects in the laws which call loudly for remedial action. If a similar situation existed in any other branch of the service—a palpable failure to come anywhere near filling its intended purpose—it is morally certain that a legislative remedy would be devised and applied. But Congress seems more than willing to be a supplemental pension bureau.

The Boston Herald notes that a correspondent of the New York Evening Post raises the question as to whether President Roosevelt can conscientiously permit the 229 pension bills that were passed in the National House of Representatives in one hundred and ten minutes on the 15th instant to become enacted into law. The Herald says the Constitution directs that as regards each one of these bills, "if he approve he shall sign it; but if not he shall return it with his objections." And our Boston contemporary adds:

"The President may say that he approves these bills because Congress has approved them. Of course, he can approve them on no other grounds, for he has simply not the time to investigate them on their merits. The President does not differ from the body that passed them in taking this stand. These bills are generally passed by a bare quorum, if, indeed, there is a quorum in the case. The members allowing them to pass know nothing about them; they manifestly could know nothing when the bills go through at the rate of more than two per minute. The members shelter themselves behind the committee that reports the bills, and the President shelters himself behind the members. Is it edifying enactment of laws?"

It is simply impossible for the President to investigate and pass upon the merits of the claims in response to which those bills are passed. Had he nothing else to do the task would be impossible. Nor can Senators or Representatives, except those on the Pension Committees of the two Houses, perform that labor. Thus it necessarily happens that a favorable report from a committee carries a bill through. Naturally members decline to vote against a bill of whose merits they have no personal knowledge. The Post has no doubt that the Pension Committees intend to deal justly, but so many grists come to their mills that mistakes are unavoidable.

But we do not believe it is necessary to supplement the Pension Bureau—the elaborate and costly mechanism provided for the carrying out of the pension laws—with those pension mills in the Capitol. Either those laws are defective or Congress is doing what it has no occasion to do. In either case the responsibility rests on Congress.

These letters and newspaper editorials show that my humble efforts in opposition to this wholesale passage of private pension bills are not passing unnoticed by the press and people of the country, and when the people are fully informed as to the great discrimination practiced by the House in these private pension bills, and that they pass by the hundred without the least bit of consideration, Representatives will be sent here that will demand that an end be put to this farce of private pension bill day, and that every bill be properly considered, and that bills for pensions be passed only in such cases as have no remedy under the general law and are meritorious and for such amounts as would be given the pensioner under the general law was his title good at the Bureau, and before any bill for a pension should pass it should be submitted to the Pension Bureau and receive its favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH A. CARTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3650) granting a pension to Sarah A. Carter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Carter, dependent mother of Joseph S. Carter, late of Captain Cobb's company, Maine State Militia, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY M. TAYLOR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3216) granting an increase of pension to Henry M. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry M. Taylor, late of Company H, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARTHA A. HOLLINGSEAD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5883) granting a pension to Martha A. Hollingseed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a pension of $20 per month be granted to Mrs. Martha A. Hollingseed, of Elkhart, Tex.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha A. Hollingseed, widow of Joseph Hollingseed, late of Company A, Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Martha A. Hollingseed."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW B. SPURLING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11916) granting an increase of pension to Andrew B. Spurling.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew B. Spurling, late lieutenant-colonel Second Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry and brevet brigadier-general of volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee amendment to this bill fixes the amount at $30 a month. I would like to move an amendment to the committee amendment, by substituting the word "fifty" for the word "thirty," and in offering that amendment I should, perhaps, say a few words to the committee. Although the beneficiary of this bill, General Spurling, lives in my district, I have not the honor of a personal acquaintance with this distinguished officer. The facts in this case were sent to me by some of his friends, and upon their statement of facts I introduced the bill as requested by them. The report in this case states that he enlisted in the volunteer service from the State of Maine, and that he served from 1861 to December, 1865, in the First and Second Maine Cavalry, being honorably discharged with the brevet rank of brigadier-general.

He was four times wounded—twice in 1863, by a gunshot wound, a pistol shot; in 1864 by a saber cut, and the same year being thrown from Escambia bridge—and, furthermore, that he contracted acute rheumatism. The pension he is now receiving is $22.50 a month. He is now 70 years of age. I have received from some of his friends in Chicago this morning an affidavit, sworn to on the 26th day of this month, in which it is stated that within the past eighteen months General Spurling has been twice paralyzed; that he is entirely helpless, and that in 1894 he lost all the property that he had, and he is now entirely destitute. Considering these facts as submitted to me by men in whom I have the highest confidence, considering the honorable and distinguished service of this man, considering his destitution and paralysis, it seems to me we could, not only in generosity, but in strict justice, make this $50 a month; and I therefore offer that amendment in place of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois proposes to amend the committee amendment by inserting the word "fifty" in place of the word "thirty." The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, if the statement of the gentleman from Illinois is true, I have no objection to the amendment. I would have been glad if that information had been known to the committee. There was nothing as to his present condition, there was nothing as to his financial condition. There was nothing except the fact that he was a lieutenant-colonel, and the committee's report of $30 was the full amount. Ordinarily I think the facts stated by the gentleman ought to have come to the committee, so that they could have been considered; but in this instance I shall make no further objection.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks the affidavit I have just received.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman will be allowed to extend his remarks in the way indicated.

There was no objection.

The affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

Andrew B. Spurling, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is upward of 69 years of age, and that in the month of October, A. D. 1900, he was stricken with paralysis, whereby his right side was completely paralyzed, and whereby he was confined in a hospital for a period of about five weeks, and thereafter recovered sufficiently therefrom to be able to walk with difficulty, and that since said time he has not been able to perform any labor or transact any business whatever, and that in the year 1901 he suffered from another stroke of paralysis, which again paralyzed his right side temporarily, and since said time he has been able to walk only with difficulty, and has been ever since and now is wholly and entirely unable to perform any labor or transact any business; and affiant further says that he is entirely without property or means of support, except the amount being received by him as a pension from the Government of the United States.

Affiant further says that immediately prior to the financial panic of 1893 he was well situated financially, but invested all of his means in the purchase of property and construction of buildings thereon in the city of Elgin, in the State of Illinois, and that about the year 1894, by reason of said financial panic and depression in real-estate values caused thereby, affiant lost all of said property and means by the foreclosure of mortgages upon said property, and that said property was lost through the failure of other parties, who were indebted to affiant in a large amount and became unable to pay affiant the amount of such indebtedness.

ANDREW B. SPURLING.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of March, A. D. 1902.
[SEAL.] HALLIE C. ELLIS,

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELLA R. GRAHAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1630) granting an increase of pension to Ella R. Graham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ella R. Graham, widow of James Duncan Graham, late commander, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES E. DEXTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3481) granting an increase of pension to James E. Dexter.

CHESTER E. WADSWORTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12115) granting a pension to Chester E. Wadsworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Chester E. Wadsworth, late of Captain Barker's Dragoons, Illinois State Militia, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "Dragoons" and insert in lieu thereof the word "company." In line 7 strike out the words "State Militia" and insert "Volunteer Cavalry." In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "twelve."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "seventeen." I think the facts in the case are shown by the report of the committee; but, simply for the sake of comparison, I secured the report of the committee on the bill just passed preceding this, and I find in that case the pensioner was receiving $6 a month and it was increased to $20 a month. I think a comparison of that report with this one will show that the facts in that case are no stronger than in this case. This man is not receiving a pension at all. He was in what was known as Barker's Illinois Cavalry, which was held not to have been mustered into the service of the United States. He was drawing a pension under the construction of the Department that held that this cavalry was mustered into the service of the United States; he was drawing a pension of $8 a month; but subsequently they held that it was not in the service of the United States, and the pension was dropped.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the statement of the report by the committee itself. From the showing made in the Department this man was receiving a pension of $8 per month for hemorrhoids and disease of the rectum. It shows, too, that he lives on a little piece of land worth $200 or $300, that he has been poor, and has asked the county for aid three or four times. The testimony was filed showing that he was incapacitated in consequence of injury to the left foot, and that he had no means of support, although he was temperate, industrious, and of good moral character.

This man applied for an increase of pension in 1889, and the report of the last examination shows this:

Prior to the dropping of the soldier's name from the roll the beneficiary filed, in 1889, another claim for pension on account of rupture, injury to foot, catarrh, and stricture, but this claim was also rejected in 1895 upon the ground that title to pension could not obtain for the reason that the soldier's organization had not been in the United States service.

When last examined, in 1892, the board of surgeons found him to be suffering from a rupture, stricture, injury to the left foot, catarrh, and pleurisy.

Now, it seems to me that a man in this condition should be entitled to receive more than $12 a month. The Pension Office found that the disabilities for which he was receiving a pension was of service origin. They did not give him an opportunity to show under the second application that the disabilities were incurred in the service.

I think in the affidavit he alleges that they did occur in the service, and he sets out in detail how the disabilities were incurred. I believe it would be just for this pensioner to be given at least $17 a month. I think it is a modest request, and that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, the committee recommended what they thought under the circumstances this man ought to have. His service was very short, only from April 19, 1861, to August 18, 1861. The gentleman reads from the last examination of the report of the board of surgeons of the difficulties which they found were contracted in the service. We have given him $12, a pension which, under the act of 1890, would be for total disability. I hardly think we should be justified in adopting the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "twelve" and inserting "twenty."

This applicant had a bill reported by the Senate committee in the last Congress, and I find upon examination that this report is a copy of that report. I know the man to be in a very feeble state of health, and I ask the committee to accept this amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill, and I do not think we should be justified in adopting such an amendment. Nothing has been stated that will warrant us in accepting it.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I move to amend this bill by striking out "$24" and inserting "$30." Mr. Chairman, I know this soldier very well. I have known him for twenty-five years. For more than twenty years I have been proud to call him my personal friend. I know his history and his condition. He is the personal friend of a number of eminent members of this House and of the Senate. He served the State of Kansas as her lieutenant-governor four years. He was one of the prominent newspaper editors in that State. Every soldier in the State knows him by sight and knows the sound of his voice. All the members of this House from Kansas know him personally. He was and is as true a patriot as ever served this country.

In the war he served eleven months of bitter imprisonment. He came home a wreck. He has never seen a well day from that time to this. A man 5 feet 6½ inches in height, he weighed only 115 pounds. For the last twenty years he has not been able to do any more manual labor than a child 10 years old. He is wholly disabled and has been for years for the performance of any kind of labor. If he does not now require the daily attention of another person, it is certainly but a short time when he will. He is a man of unusual intellectual character, and, like many other good soldiers, he never applied for a pension as long as his brain and hand could labor. He should have been pensioned from the day of his discharge. He needs it now and I know he is worthy of it.

I am satisfied that if the Senate had had before it the testimony that I am now reciting that body would have passed the bill at $30 a month. I hope that such an amendment may be made here, and I offer the amendment as a committee amendment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment of the committee?

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I do.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the committee be liberal enough with me in this case to give the applicant at least $15 a month instead of $8.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "eight" and insert "fifteen."

Mr. DAVIS. The report of the committee in this case gives $8 a month. Mr. Johnson, the beneficiary of the bill, was really a captain in the Florida Seminole Indian war, but the records were so incomplete that that fact is not made to appear of record here. He appeared only as a private, and upon that idea was given only $8 a month by the amendment of the committee. Captain Johnson was in point of fact a captain in this war and did valiant and splendid service. I ask the committee, therefore, to give him $15 a month instead of the $8 reported by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman that the amendment recommended by the committee gives twelve dollars a month instead of eight. Does the gentleman desire to correct his amendment, so as to make it read to insert "fifteen" instead of "twelve?"

Mr. DAVIS. The bill I have before me gives him a pension at the rate of $8 a month; but in any event I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida moves to amend the committee amendment by inserting the word "fifteen" in place of the word "twelve."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust the committee will not adopt this amendment. The gentleman evidently was in error in regard to the amount carried in the bill as reported from the committee. As amended by the committee, the bill proposes to pay this soldier $12 a month. That is the rate that the general law gives to soldiers of the Mexican war when they are dependent, but this beneficiary is not dependent. The testimony shows that he is possessed of property; that he applied under the law for an increase to $12 and was denied. This gives him the $12 a month.

Mr. DAVIS. If the gentleman will permit me, I have a print of the bill before me which purports to be amended so as to allow $8 a month. If the statement of the gentleman is correct, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is reported at $12 a month.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 29, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 13031, known as the Chinese-exclusion bill, be taken up as a continuing order at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill that is by order now pending in the House—the Revenue-Cutter Service bill—this not to interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] asks unanimous consent that House bill 13031, being the Chinese-exclusion bill, be made the continuing order after the disposition of the Revenue-Cutter Service bill until disposed of, not to interfere with bills affecting the revenue and appropriation bills.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under the same provisions as now apply to the Revenue-Cutter Service bill?

The SPEAKER. Under the same conditions exactly as apply to the present continuing order. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should like to know whether this comes as a unanimous request from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HITT. The bill itself is one to which we have all substantially agreed, and perhaps the gentleman from Tennessee is aware that this is a measure of peculiar urgency, as it is to take the place of legislation speedily to expire. We have all agreed to have the measure taken up as soon as possible, and we think it will take only a brief time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that all the members of the committee may be in favor of the measure; but whether the minority members would favor making it a special order or not is another question.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can speak for all the members of the minority; but it is absolutely necessary that this bill be taken up and disposed of at an early date, because, as the chairman has stated, the old law will expire by limitation on the 5th of May next. I am going to file a minority report, with the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

GEN. NELSON A. MILES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the following resolution of the House of Representatives of March 26, 1902, "Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House copies of all correspondence relating to, and papers bearing on, the matter of the reported request of Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, United States Army, to be assigned to duty in the Philippine Archipelago and to be allowed to put into effect there a plan outlined by him to bring about a cessation of hostilities," I transmit herewith copies of all the papers upon which final action in the matter was taken.

Since such final action and since the introduction of said resolution, a further memorandum has been added to the papers by Lieutenant-General Miles, and I transmit also a copy thereof, together with the action thereon.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 29, 1902.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on War Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 475) to refer the claim of Joseph W. Parish to the Secretary of the Treasury for examination and payment of any balance found due; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles; and the same were, on motion of Mr. BROMWELL, respectively concurred in:

A bill (H. R. 12315) granting an increase of pension to James Cobb; and

A bill (H. R. 2273) granting a pension to Martha A. De La-mater.

EFFICIENCY OF REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and pending, that motion I would like to see whether we can not arrange with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to the time to be allowed for general debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the demand for time in opposition of the bill considerably exceeds the amount of time which I am about to request be allowed; but I ask that we have at least five hours on a side.

Mr. SHERMAN. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to dispose of this bill in less than ten hours' general debate. Let me suggest three hours on a side.

Mr. MANN. Suppose I suggest to the gentleman that we run to-day. I think we will have no trouble in coming to some understanding about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. As far as I am personally concerned, that would meet my views entirely, but there are a number of gentlemen whose opinions differ and whose votes will differ when we come to a vote on this bill, who desire to be here, and it is with the hope of getting some definite time fixed for their guidance that I make the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I suppose that under no circumstances could a vote be had upon the bill to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, so far as this side of the question is concerned, I think we might. I have not had numerous applications for time.

Mr. MANN. Well, I hardly think it would be possible on any division of time—

Mr. SHERMAN. We could debate four hours and a half to-day, surely. Suppose we agree upon six hours; that would leave an hour and a half on another day. I assume that we can not go on with the bill on Monday, as my understanding is that the sundry civil bill is to be considered on Monday.

Mr. MANN. That is what I supposed. Suppose we proceed to-day without limitation. I think we will have no trouble in coming to an agreement, as the bill will not come up Monday anyway. The demand has been much greater than five hours for time, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to be strenuous about it, but I do think we can get along better if we agree upon some time, even though that time be somewhat lengthy. I think I would sooner agree to the five hours than have no agreement at all.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman agrees to four hours' general debate to-day and four thereafter on some other day, the time to be equally divided.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is satisfactory as far as I am concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to eight hours—four hours on a side—four hours to be used to-day and four at some subsequent day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I assume it is understood that the gentleman from Illinois and myself will control the time?

The SPEAKER. That will have to be agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that that agreement be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time that has just been allotted for this bill in general debate be controlled by himself and by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection to this request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1025) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the first reading of the bill was dispensed with the other day. The bill contains 10 sections and it does substantially this, and this only: It increases the rank and the pay of revenue-cutter officers, it regulates their relation of command with that of naval officers when the two services are thrown together, and it provides a retired list for the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. That, in substance, is all that the bill does. The committee have agreed upon an amendment which at the proper time will be offered to section 2, and which is as follows, at the close of that section:

Provided further, That such assimilated rank shall not be construed to place any officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service in charge of any naval vessel, nor shall any naval officer be placed in charge of a revenue cutter except by direct order of the President.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question about the amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I did not catch the exact wording of the suggested amendment, nor do I know whether I understand it quite fully without consideration, but I would like to ask the gentleman what is the purpose of the amendment. Is it to provide that in case a revenue cutter and a naval vessel are together under no circumstances shall the revenue-cutter officer have command?

Mr. SHERMAN. He shall not have command of the naval vessel. He will have command of his own vessel, but not of the naval vessel.

Mr. MANN. I assume that one of the two would have command of the two vessels, and I ask to know whether the purport of that was simply to say that the revenue-cutter captain should not be placed on board of the naval vessel in command or whether he should not be in command of the naval vessel.

Mr. HEPBURN. Permit me to read the language again:

Provided further, That such assimilated rank shall not be construed to place any officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service in charge of any naval vessel, nor shall any naval officer be placed in charge of a revenue cutter except by direct order of the President.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further—he has considered the language undoubtedly—whether that language is, in his judgment, intended to say that if the two vessels are side by side, by themselves, where one would ordinarily be under the control of the officer of the other, the revenue-cutter officer in that case shall not command, or simply that he shall not be placed in charge of the naval vessel?

Mr. HEPBURN. It means, I think, that he shall not command in any way the naval vessel. For instance, he would not in any way be a commander of a squadron made up of revenue cutters and naval vessels.

Mr. MANN. Is that the intention?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the intention of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Then I invite the gentleman to carefully consider the language, because on a casual reading—of course I have not given it the thought the gentleman has—it seems to me as though that intention was not clearly stated.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no objection to the gentleman perfecting the language to suit himself.

Mr. MANN. I have a great deal more faith in the gentleman's ability to perfect the language than I would have in my own.

Mr. HEPBURN. It has been submitted to members of the Naval Committee, and, as I understand, it is entirely satisfactory to them. We will modify the language, if it is necessary, so as to carry out that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that in practice, in fact, there never has occurred a time when the two vessels of the service have been thrown together so as to clash in this matter in any way.

Mr. HEPBURN. No cutter officer has ever attempted to command a naval officer.

Mr. SHERMAN. No cutter officer has ever yet been placed in a position where he has claimed the command or attempted to exercise the command of a naval vessel. The intention of this amendment, as the chairman of the committee [Mr. HEPBURN] has stated, is, as I understand it, definitely to determine by statute that no revenue-cutter officer shall command a naval vessel.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the case as the statute now reads?

Mr. SHERMAN. What harm, then, in inserting it here? That is the intention of the amendment, as I understand it, as stated by the chairman.

Mr. MANN. But the statute as it now reads would be changed by this bill if enacted into law.

Mr. SHERMAN. As intimated by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], if the amendment as proposed does not cover what is intended, I should be glad to receive a suggestion from the gentleman from Illinois to change it so that it will accomplish that purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume that this House is fairly familiar with what the Revenue-Cutter Service is. I assume that the general duties of the service are understood by the House and that gentlemen know that they are semimilitary, certainly at times. The service at present has about 200 officers—202 or 207, I think, to be exact—and has about 1,000 enlisted men. The commissioned officers all receive their appointments from the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate. The officers are appointed from the noncommissioned men. They are all appointed by promotion. The lowest grade, the noncommissioned officers, are obliged to have a course of two years upon the training ship, which course is in many particulars very similar to that provided at the Naval Academy. I have a statement here in parallel columns showing the course of instruction at the Naval Academy and on the training ship of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I will not read it in full, but with the permission of the committee will print it in full in my remarks.

The length of the course at the Naval Academy is four years, while that on the training ship is two years; but the cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service are admitted into that service at a greater age than are the cadets at Annapolis admitted.

At Annapolis during two years the cadets are instructed in seamanship. During two years they are instructed in seamanship upon the training ship of the Revenue-Cutter Service. At the Academy they are instructed for three and a half years in navigation and on the training ship for two years they are instructed in navigation. In ordnance and gunnery they are instructed during the third and fourth years at the Academy, and during both years upon the training ship of the Revenue-Cutter Service. They are instructed also in both places in international law. Of course, in revenue law they are instructed in the Revenue-Cutter Service and not in the Naval Academy. They have compass instruction in both schools. They have surveying in both, and in both they have hygiene, marine engineering, mathematics, and so forth. In drill the exercises are practically identical at both institutions, and the hours for instruction in these various subjects are very similar in both services.

The men of the Revenue-Cutter Service are enlisted for three years and receive the compensation which is prevalent in the ordinary merchant service on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service in time of peace are, in my judgment, more strenuous, more exacting, more difficult, and more dangerous than are the duties of the naval officer in time of peace.

The statute provides that the President shall at any time, either in peace or war, transfer the Revenue-Cutter Service, which in ordinary times is under the Treasury Department, to the Navy Department and to service under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, and in every war in which this country has been engaged the Revenue-Cutter Service has, in fact, been transferred to the Navy Department, and has, in fact, rendered valiant, heroic service, quite as much so, admittedly so even by the report of the minority in opposition to this bill, as have the officers and men of the Navy.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is older by many years than the Navy. It was the naval war arm of the Government for ten years before any Navy Department was provided by law. It is unnecessary to cite the instances of the specially heroic and specially valiant and particularly valuable services given by revenue-cutter officers and crews and boats during the times that this country has been at war. It will not be forgotten—it has not been forgotten—by members of this committee and by citizens of this country that a revenue-cutter boat was the first upon which the guns of the enemy were directed at Manila. It will not be forgotten that the Hudson at Cardenas performed specially heroic and particularly valuable service in rescuing the Winslow, a naval vessel, when in the most perilous position. It performed this service at the utmost risk to the vessel and to the lives of all the revenue officers and crew upon it.

In a magazine article which I have before me—Cassiere's Magazine, of March, 1899—is an article upon the Revenue-Cutter Service, in which are set out in detail the services rendered by officers and by vessels during the various wars. I will not go into this in particular. It refers to the uprising of the Seminole Indians in 1836, and to the services of the revenue cutters during the civil war, and also during the war with Spain, recently closed.

Mr. Chairman, I may print a few paragraphs from this magazine article in connection with my remarks, but I will not occupy the time of the committee in now reading these matters in detail.

That this service is not treated as the naval service, side by side with which it serves, is unquestioned. The officers of this service do not receive the compensation, either in times of war or of peace, that naval officers do. True it is that in times of war they are put upon the pension rolls for any injury they may receive at that time, but at no other time is there any pension provided for any officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service. The highest rank in the Revenue-Cutter Service is that of captain. There is no longevity pay provided for any one in the Revenue-Cutter Service. So that the highest compensation received by any Revenue-Cutter officer is $2,500, a compensation no greater, Mr. Chairman, than is received by many officers in the Navy who were yet unborn when most valiant and heroic service was rendered by fellow-officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who are to-day only receiving that compensation.

There are many instances of this kind in the two services. This bill provides that the captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall hereafter rank with and receive the compensation, including longevity pay, of majors in the Army and lieutenant-commanders in the Navy. That would increase their pay from $2,500 to $3,500 a year. That the first lieutenants in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank with and receive the compensation of captains in the Army and first lieutenants of the Navy, or $2,500; that second lieutenants of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank with and receive the compensation of first lieutenants in the Army and lieutenants of the junior grade of the Navy, or $2,140 a year; and that third lieutenants of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank with and receive the pay of second lieutenants of the Army and ensigns of the Navy, or $2,000 a year.

Now, no longevity pay is given to any Revenue-Cutter officer. I assume it is known by the members of this House that longevity pay is an increase of 10 per cent for each five years of service after commission during the first twenty years, so that at most the compensation may be increased by 40 per cent and no more. Now, the offices of captain of engineers, Chief of Engineers, and assistant engineers correspond with those of captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants of the Revenue Cutter, and these officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service receive the compensation and rank and pay as do captains and second lieutenants under this bill.

Substantially this same measure, the same relief for the Revenue-Cutter Service, has been repeatedly recommended by Presidents of the United States over and over again, and it has been recommended by every Secretary of the Treasury of every party from 1871 down to the present time; and over and again, in making this recommendation, has the Secretary of the Treasury called attention to the value of the Service and to the justice of increasing the rank and compensation to be received.

The duties of the Service in times of peace are set forth in detail in the regulations relating thereto, and are found upon pages 26, and so on, in the book of regulations. I will not read them in full; but, to summarize these duties, in time of peace they consist in the enforcement of all laws of the United States affecting the maritime interest of the nation; the arrest and prevention of illicit traffic by sea; the navigation laws, compelling all kinds of craft navigating the waters of the United States to comply with legal requirements in regard to documents, lights, steamboat inspection, and passenger laws; the quarantine laws; the rescue and succor of distressed vessels and crews; the drill and discipline of the life-saving crews; the supervision of construction of life-saving stations, and the entire inspection work of that service, the supervision of anchorage grounds established by law, etc.

The duty performed in this service when rescuing crews of distressed vessels has been most important. It has been the saving of innumerable lives and of vast values in property. In their minority report upon this bill attention is called to the fact that these reports are not submitted in detail to Congress. They are submitted, Mr. Chairman, in detail by the service to the Secretary of the Treasury, and are on file in the Bureau subject to the inspection at any time of anybody who desires to see them. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I desire to refer to the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the day before yesterday in discussing the rule under which we are now operating. He challenged the statement that the revenue-cutter Gresham saved any lives on August 13 in rescuing the Fraternidade. The gentleman from Illinois made the statement that a false report had been made in that case, because, as he said, Captain Walker, in making his detailed report of that service, stated that no lives whatever had been rescued. I think the gentleman from Illinois either never saw the report of Captain Walker or else he has misunderstood Captain Walker's statement in that instance, because I have here and I will read the full report of Captain Walker of that service. He says:

Letter of Capt. T. D. Walker, R. C. S., commanding the Gresham, to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for information of the Department, a report on Form 2015, of assistance rendered by the Gresham to the Portuguese barkentine Fraternidade, of Brava, Cape Verde Islands, on the 13th instant, near Narragansett Pier, Rhode Island. We were cruising from Newport to New London when we sighted the bark anchored dangerously near to the rocks with a distress signal flying, and we at once proceeded to extricate her. As we approached a second flag (ensign) was placed in the mizzen rigging, as though to emphasize the appeal of the unfortunate people for aid. Owing to the sea the bark was riding heavily, and the captain momentarily expected that his only remaining cable would break. In that event the bark would have been dashed onto the rocks, and there is no telling what the consequences might have been. It is reasonably certain that serious loss of life would have resulted, as the people, especially the women, seemed badly demoralized. The safety of the bark and the large number of people on board hung, as it were, upon a very slender thread, and I feel thankful that our good little ship happened along at the right time and was able to do the right thing. No other vessel capable of sending assistance was in sight, and this made our presence the more opportune. Crowds of summer cottagers from Narragansett Pier lined the rocks, but, under the circumstances, they were powerless to render aid. The officers and crew of the ship did their duty well.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS D. WALKER,
Captain, R. C. S., Commanding.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that the gentleman from Illinois had seen that report when he made the assertion that Captain Walker had stated that he saved no lives.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to say that I have not only seen that report, but I had a copy of it from the Department. At first the copy did not seem to be a full report, and hence I asked the Department again to send me the report in full, and I have here the report of the assistance rendered by the United States steamer Gresham to this vessel on August 13, 1900, in full, tabulated form. It is No. 30. It gives number, name, residence of persons actually rescued from drowning; and in answer to that question, the answer is given "none." This was furnished to me by the Revenue-Cutter Office itself, and is a complete tabulated report of the officer in charge of the revenue-cutter Gresham, and he says "none" in answer to the number of persons rescued from drowning.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the officer of that vessel found none of the crew in the water liable to sink out of sight in a moment. I suppose that is what that means. I assume that the tabulated report, where specific questions are put to be answered in the affirmative or negative, simply means that where the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service find persons actually in the water they have rescued them from drowning. And yet, Mr. Chairman, while that condition did not exist at that time, here is the specific and detailed report of what was done by this officer and vessel. Here is a report stating that he found the Fraternidade in a very perilous position, found it liable to be driven upon the rocks at any moment, when undoubtedly there would have been very great loss of life.

Here is the officer's full and detailed statement of exactly what was done by his vessel and crew, and with that report before us, Mr. Chairman, can we draw any other conclusion than that had it not been for the presence of the revenue-cutter Gresham at that time many lives would have been lost?

A life-saving crew was stationed near the point, and the life-saving crew were unable to reach the vessel; and, as Captain Walker said, but for the fortunate arrival of the Gresham in all human probability a very large number of persons on that vessel at that time would have lost their lives. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to ask me something further?

Mr. MANN. No. I wish to say that I understand the vessel that was rescued in this case—and I have no doubt whatever that good service was rendered, and I never intimated anything to the contrary—the vessel rescued in this case was at anchor, and they were afraid that the anchor chain would break. Thereupon the Gresham pulled the vessel away, and did not take anybody off from the vessel at all. They pulled the vessel away and put her at some other place, and yet they claim to have actually rescued from drowning each of the persons on the vessel who were never taken off from the vessel.

Mr. SHERMAN. I made no such statement. The gentleman makes a direct statement that the captain says he saved nobody. The gentleman the other day made the direct statement that the report was false in stating that anybody was rescued, and yet here is the report stating in detail what was done, and the only possible conclusion that could be drawn is that the services there rendered in all human probability did save the lives of many people.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not say that I said the vessel rescued no lives. I made no such statement. I said the report of the captain in charge of the vessel stated that they rescued no life.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I said you stated.

Mr. MANN. I have here the report transcribed and sent by the Revenue-Cutter Office, saying the same thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. Saying that he saved nobody from drowning; in other words, picked up no human beings out of the water. I do not know that the gentleman had that report, but I do know that that is one of the reports he could have had. I do know that every facility was offered him in the Revenue-Cutter Office to find out all the facts he could wish. I do know that the chief of that Bureau has furnished him a copy of every document he has asked for. I do know that it was possible for him to have seen that report.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman does not know that, and in order that he may be sure of it, I will say that it is true.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have here the gentleman's letter to the Department and the Department's reply; and on those I state that I know it.

Mr. MANN. I have no question about that. I have received from the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service great courtesy. They have endeavored, as far as possible, to furnish me with all information I requested, except they have told me that certain information not in print was altogether too voluminous to be transcribed, and I have made no complaint about that, because it is undoubtedly true. I have contended here that the information ought to be published so that we might know what the facts in the case are. That was the point. But I say now that the letter to which the gentleman refers does not show that any lives were actually rescued from drowning, which is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that it is necessary to thrash that straw over again. The report does show just exactly what was done. It does not show that anybody was actually taken out of the water, and such is not the fact. But it does show that all of the cables save one were broken, that a storm was raging, that a high wind was blowing, and that probably this vessel would have been dashed against the rocks and destroyed, with many of those on board, had not the revenue cutter come to the rescue.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will allow me, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to what he did say. It having been stated that the report showed that 178 lives were actually rescued from drowning, he said that if we had had a printed report of the operations of this service it would have shown, not that they were actually rescued from drowning, but that the cutter saved no lives at that time. That was the assertion of the gentleman from Illinois. He said that the report would show that.

Mr. SHERMAN. In my judgment it shows that many lives were saved. The report is here, and members of the House can draw their own conclusions.

Mr. Chairman, that is only one of the scores and scores of reports showing service rendered under very much more difficult and hazardous conditions than this; some of them showing, of course, as all such reports must show, that at times the service was trivial, and that often had the service not been rendered probably no disaster to life and property would have ensued. But these reports do show this fact, and the hearings before the committee disclose it, that for years and years the vessels of this service, in season and out of season—generally in storm, but sometimes in calm—have been patrolling our coast, have extended the hand of succor to vessels and mariners in distress, have done so at the risk of their own vessels and their own lives over and over again.

Now, in the minority report—I think I will not go further into those details, Mr. Chairman. The reports in the Department, if they were all published, would make volumes and volumes; they are very, very numerous, and as I say some show very serious and very valuable service and others show service less hazardous and less valuable.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois, or whoever prepared the minority report—I assume it was drawn by the gentleman from Illinois—asks why we do not put the Marine-Hospital Service, the Fish-Commission service, the Life-Saving Service under the same regulations, the same statutes that are provided in this bill for the Revenue-Cutter Service. Why, Mr. Chairman, we do not do it because the law already does it, because the vessels of all those services are now commanded by naval officers who have the pay we are proposing to provide for revenue-cutter officers and the longevity pay as well. If this bill looked to the relief of the vessel and not to the officer commanding it, the suggestion of the gentleman made in the minority report would be well taken, but when you consider the fact that the officers commanding all those vessels in the other services are naval officers who now enjoy not only all but more privilege and more emoluments than are provided by this bill to the Revenue-Cutter Service officers, then we see how misleading is the statement in the minority report.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask whether or not the gentleman is satisfied that the amendment suggested, and which is supposed in the future to prevent conflict between Revenue-Cutter Service and Navy service, will work that result?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly satisfied it will; but if there is any possibility of its not doing so, we will change it so that it does. That is the desire of the committee who report this bill, and I believe it is the desire of the House, and I believe that result will be accomplished. Now, Mr. Chairman, the opponents of this measure object to it, amongst other things, as indicated by the minority report, because it gives a preference, as they say, to officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service over officers of the Navy.

The gentleman is in error in making that statement, as can be shown by two or three illustrations. For instance, Lieutenant-Commander Fullen, of the Navy, entered that service in 1873. Six years of the intervening service was spent at the Naval Academy. He is now a lieutenant-commander and drawing $3,500 a year. First Lieutenant Newcome, of the Revenue-Cutter Service, entered that service the same year. He had previously served two years, from 1863 to 1865, in the naval establishment of this Government in the civil war. He served also during the Spanish war in the naval armament of the country, being in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and being transferred to the Navy Department by order of the President. Yet to-day he, as a first lieutenant of the Revenue-Cutter Service, receives but $1,800 a year. There are 25 captains in the Marine Corps who outrank Lieutenant Newcome who were not born at the time Lieutenant Newcome served his country in the volunteer navy during the civil war.

Of the seven first lieutenants—mark you, Mr. Chairman, first lieutenants—at the head of the list of the Revenue-Cutter Service, five of them served in the naval establishment during the civil war. Five officers serving to-day for $1,800 a year, forced to perform in times of war every service that every naval officer is required to perform, performing during periods of peace a more arduous and more exacting service, receive less compensation for their service at the present time than a very large number of naval officers who were not born at the time these services were rendered by them in the civil war, and without any hope of any early increase in their pay, and without any expectation or any hope under the present law of ever being cared for in their old and declining years. I have given only one or two illustrations, which, I think, show the incorrectness of the statements of the minority that the Revenue-Cutter Service is preferred or will be preferred, by virtue of this bill, over the naval officers. In the minority report it is asked, Why not put the enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service on a retired list if you are to put the officers upon it?

Why, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, that query might be answered with another. Why not put the enlisted men of the Army and Navy on a retired list? If it applies in the one case it ought in the other; but there is another answer if any answer is needed, and it is this: That those enlisted men are enlisted for three years only. They can leave at the end of that time of enlistment and usually do. Reenlistments are not numerous. Enlisted men are not required to have a technical education, they are not required to pass an examination, and their whole life is not devoted to this one service. The minority report states in substance that the passage of this bill would result in very rapid, unduly rapid, promotions in the Revenue-Cutter Service. That statement is based upon the fact that there are more captains and first lieutenants than there are minor officers in that service.

The statement is not well founded, Mr. Chairman, because I think we are all familiar enough with current events to know that the promotions in the Army have recently been most rapid, for reasons that are well known, and also that the promotions in the Navy have been very rapid. What are the facts about the rapidity of promotions in the Revenue-Cutter Service? There is no captain in that service to-day, not one, who enlisted later than 1871. There is no captain who now receives more than $2,500 per year. Every officer now on the active list of the Navy who enlisted in that service as early as 1871 receives at least $3,500, or a thousand dollars more than the Revenue-Cutter Service officer of highest rank who entered the service at the same time.

The average age of the Revenue Service officer when he reaches a captaincy is 50 years. The average of the Naval officer when he reaches a grade at which he would draw $3,500 a year is 38 years. There are several officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who are now only captains—and that is the highest grade—who are now 58 years old. There are those above 60 who are on the waiting-order list.

Mr. Chairman, I think that covers substantially, in as brief a time and in as few words as I could confine it, the reasons which impelled the majority of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to report this bill favorably; the reasons which have impelled Secretaries of the Treasury, for thirty years, to advocate the passage of substantially this same measure; the reasons which have impelled the present occupant of the White House and his predecessors for many years to call the especial attention of Congress to this service and its needs; the reason why we are here now earnestly advocating that at this late day officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service shall be put upon something near an equality with officers of another service, under a different title, who perform no more arduous, serious, or valuable services in time of peace than do the revenue-cutter officers, and who in time of war perform services just as valuable, just as hazardous, just as brilliant as do the officers of the Navy.

The history of our country, Mr. Chairman, has been made more glorious by the service of the revenue-cutter officers. There is not one blot upon their record that I have been able to discover, in any spot or place. And for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, we earnestly urge the members of this committee favorably to recommend to the House the passage of this bill.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it would have been a great deal more pleasant to me, from a personal standpoint, to have been able to agree with the majority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the report they have made on this bill. In doing so I should have answered the kind requests of a great many friends outside of Congress who have importuned me, honestly and sincerely, to support this bill; but with the convictions that I have as to the general policy, the objects and purposes of this bill, I could not consistently do so.

I heard the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in the remarks that he submitted on the rule designating this bill as a continuing order, say that, after an experience of several years on this committee, he has been unable from the meager reports, opportunities, and facilities given him by the director of the Revenue-Cutter Service to understand and comprehend the details of that service. In the remarks that I propose to submit this morning I shall not enter at length into the details, but I shall confine myself chiefly to the purpose, to the object, and to the general policy declared in this bill.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that in the limited time and opportunity that I have had since being a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to investigate and inquire into this matter, one of the chief facts, and the one that I look upon as "a headlight" in this matter—that sheds light all up and down the line—is the fact that the Revenue-Cutter Service was created and organized in 1790—eight years before the Navy was created. It was then placed in the keeping and under the care of the Treasury Department, the most powerful civil department in this Government. I know that the majority in their report say that since 1872, to date, every Secretary of the Treasury has indorsed and recommended a bill of a character similar to this. I am not here either to affirm or deny that fact, but I propound this question today: If this bill in its objects and in its purposes, as is confessed, is intended to put the Revenue-Cutter Service officers on "an equal footing" with the officers of the Navy and the Army, why is it that no Secretary of the Navy has been found to indorse a bill of this character? There must be some reason for this. There is something behind it. I know that this bill has been before Congress in different shapes and forms for years past. Mr. Chairman, I will read from a letter of ex-Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, written in 1892. Remember that the title of this bill is to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. Tracy says:

In reply to your letter of January 20, inclosing for my consideration Senate bill No. 67.

To do what was that bill? Was it to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service? No; to transfer the Revenue-Cutter Service from the Treasury Department "to the Navy," and he gave his reasons why he would indorse it. Is that the purpose of this bill? Is it not in effect, as every gentleman will admit, does not it intend to create a separate and distinct naval branch, different from the Navy, without incurring any of the responsibilities, duties, or obligations of the Navy; and ex-Secretary Tracy said another thing about it. Why, his reason was, Mr. Chairman, that he did not want a separate branch of the Navy; and another was that by making this transfer, by making this consolidation, it would save $603,895. I read from his letter. Does this bill that is for the consideration of this House to-day propose to make any reduction or a saving of any amount to the Government? I will show you by the figures that this bill will largely increase expenses.

I read now, Mr. Chairman, on that subject from the present occupant of the Department of the Navy, and I call especial attention to this. It is not a question here of the efficiency of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. There is no question of their having discharged in full the duties that devolve upon them in their line of duty. No question is properly raised as to their courage. All these instances referred to by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] do not touch, in my judgment, what is the real question in this case. The question here, the real question, is: "Will this Congress put its sanction upon a bill that creates a civil pension list? That is the real question—nothing more nor less. Listen to what Secretary Long says in a letter written at Washington, March 3, 1900: shows that it is a step, and one covering considerable ground, in the direction of creating a separate naval establishment, with its corps of line officers, engineers, and a constructor, its rank and rates of pay, its system of examinations for retirement and promotion, and its military honors.

A careful examination of the bill in question shows—

It is important to note that the broad question raised by Secretary Long to the nature of that bill applies to the bill now under consideration with equal force.

This bill does not differ from the one that Secretary Long was talking about, except in some immaterial features. The great object and purpose and spirit of this bill is exactly the same as the one about which Secretary Long was talking, and the same objectionable features are in this bill. Secretary Long says:

It is important to note that the broad question raised by the form in which this bill is drawn and by the provisions which it contains is whether or not, as a matter of policy, this Government should have more than one naval organization, and, if more than one, how many.

The arguments—

Says Secretary Long—

adducible in favor of conferring upon the Revenue-Cutter Service the benefits embodied in S. 728 apply with more or less force to the officers and men of the Coast Survey and the Fish Commission and to the newly created transport service, now a part of the organization of the Army.

Why, the distinguished gentleman said that the Fish Commission had nothing to do with it. It is a fact that in the Spanish-American war there were about 123 acting as auxiliary vessels to the Navy. How many of them were in the Revenue-Cutter Service? Thirteen. And the balance were the Marine Service—Fish Commission, life-saving, light-house tenders, and other vessels.

Mr. Long proceeds:

In the judgment of this Department the questions thus presented are far-reaching, and it would appear proper, before any further steps are taken in the direction of the establishment of a number of distinct organizations, naval in their character, with their necessary staff accompaniment and auxiliary machinery, under the control of at least three separate departments of the Government, that the attention of Congress should be invited to the apparently unnecessary complications which are thereby brought about, and to the patent advantages which a unified organization would afford in avoiding duplication, in interchangeability of duties at all times, and in prompt mobilization in emergencies.

Now, I read that, Mr. Chairman, from these two Secretaries, one the ex-Secretary of the Navy and the other the present incumbent, to show that the Navy Department did not favor the creation of a separate branch of the Navy as this bill proposes to create.

Now, there is another singular fact. These bills relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service have been before Congress for years. The present bill, as will be seen, changes the bill that Mr. Long was referring to in some respects. What are those changes?

Section 7 of the old bill, before the Fifty-sixth Congress, provided that the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall have served thirty years as commissioned officers in said service, and then may be retired from active service by the President. This bill we are discussing makes it sixty-four years. It is apparent what objection would be made to the thirty-year clause. A young man 18 years old in the Revenue-Cutter Service would be retired at 48—in the prime of life.

Another feature is changed, and that is section 24, which accorded the Revenue-Cutter Service some "special honors." These special honors that these gentleman at one time intended to confer upon this Revenue-Cutter Service I am glad has been stricken out from the bill. Secretary Long, in discussing the "special official honor" paragraph of the old bill, said:

Section 24 of the bill contains inflexible requirements upon the subject of official honor and courtesies which would put the Revenue-Cutter Service in an anomalous position, but particularly in the presence of representatives of foreign military and naval service.

That section has been eliminated from the present bill. Now, there is another one that has gone out, and I will not discuss that, because I understand the amendment has been made in reference to the present provisions of the bill that fully regulates and provides that a Revenue-Cutter Service officer, even though he has equal rank and receives equal pay as a corresponding naval officer, the Revenue-Cutter officer shall never take command over a naval officer. It seems to me this amendment would smart in the pride of the revenue officer. That is not my concern.

Now, the question is a natural one. Why is it that for so long—such a great number of years after this Revenue-Cutter Service was organized—more than one hundred and ten years ago, and it has remained constantly in the Treasury Department, through all the vicissitudes of wars and rumors of wars in this country, through all the changes, through all the magnificent growth and splendid achievements of our great country, why is it that Congress has refused to pass this character of bill? There is some answer to this. There is some reason for it. Why, what is it? Let us look, now, Mr. Chairman, for a moment at the title to this bill. It reads: "An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propound this question, and I would like to hear it answered: In what way and in what manner does this bill "promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service?" Does it impose additional duties; does it require additional obligations; does it make more rigid discipline? Nothing of that kind is proposed in it; nothing of that kind is contemplated. The sole object of this bill, stripped of all glamour and pyrotechnics and "gush" about the gallantry of the officers of the revenue cutters, their feats of unexcelled and unparalleled daring, all of which has no bearing whatever on the consideration of this bill—the sole object of the bill, I repeat, is to make the Revenue-Cutter officers equal to the Navy or Army officers. That is the only proposition. It proposes to do this by increasing their pay, and provides at the same time for the retirement of the officer with the increase of his pay. It seeks to establish, as I said before, a separate branch of the Navy, incompatible, independent with our Navy, not controlled by the Secretary of the Navy, but by the Secretary of the Treasury.

What else does it do? In section 3 of this bill—and I call especial attention to it, for it seems to me it gives valuable information about the purpose of the bill—section 3 provides that the officers of the United States Revenue-Cutter Service shall hereafter receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for officers of corresponding rank in the Army, including longevity pay.

Why, I ask this committee, is the pay of these revenue officers to be estimated by corresponding officers in the Army? Why not put it according to corresponding officers in the Navy, with which Department it is so lustily claimed they are twin brothers? You know that there must be a purpose and an object, and I say that the bill, if it becomes a law, will accomplish that "purpose and object." This bill, in fact and in truth, gives preference to the revenue-cutter officer over the naval officer, and increases their pay above the pay of the naval officer.

I say that this bill does that. Why, it is a known fact, and I will read it to you, that when a naval officer is on the high seas he gets full pay; when he comes ashore there is a reduction of 15 per cent in his pay. Have you heard of any reduction proposed in this bill for the revenue-cutter officers because he is on shore? The statute says that when they are on shore the naval officers are subject to a reduction of 15 per cent in their pay. Does any such thing apply to the army officer, the captain or the lieutenant? Here is disclosed the "cloven foot" in this bill. Why was the army officer made the standard of pay? Are you willing, when the bill reads "to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," to put them in an advantageous position over the naval officers?

Now, Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference, in referring to the standing of a cadet, when they entered or did not enter, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] did, in the Naval Academy. The law governs us all.

Section 1556 of the Revised Statutes of the United States says:

Commanders, when at sea, $3,500; on shore duty, $3,000; on leave or waiting orders, $2,800.

Lieutenant-commanders during the first four years after date of commission, when at sea, receive $2,800; on shore duty, $2,400; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000; after four years from such date, when at sea, $3,000; on shore duty, $2,600; on leave or waiting orders, $2,200.

Lieutenants, during the first five years after date of commission, when at sea, get $2,400; on shore duty, $2,000; on leave or waiting orders, $1,600. After five years from such date, when at sea, $2,600; on shore duty, $2,200; on leave or waiting orders, $1,800.

Now, what does this bill do? I call especial attention to it. It not only makes a distinction, but it provides for the officer of the Revenue-Cutter Service larger emolument than that of the naval officer. There is the statute. "Lex scripta est." It does not make any difference, as I said before, as to when the boys enter the Naval Academy; they are subject to and bound by that law. I now read, Mr. Chairman (and I will ask to have it published as part of my remarks), a table showing the rates of pay authorized under existing law for officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the active list and on the retired list:

What is the result under this bill we are talking about? Thirty-seven captains of revenue cutters, at $3,500 each, on the active list. The captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service has corresponding rank and pay with a lieutenant-commander in the Navy. The pay of a lieutenant-commander in the Navy during the first four years, when at sea, is $2,800; on shore, $2,400; on leave or waiting orders, $2,000. After four years he gets, when at sea, $3,000; on shore duty, $2,600; on leave or waiting orders, $2,200. So, if this bill becomes a law, a captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the active list and with the "longevity pay" will get $500 more than the highest pay of a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, the officer that the revenue captain has corresponding rank with. The longevity clause, which we saw eliminated here the other day on the floor of the House from the Army appropriation bill, is included in this bill—not to exceed 40 per cent. Let us institute the comparison somewhat further. If the revenue-cutter captain goes on the "retired list" under this bill his pay is $2,625, only $175 less than the lieutenant-commander gets when at sea during the first four years after date of his commission. What is more, this retired captain gets $225 more than the lieutenant-commander gets when on shore duty and $625 more than the lieutenant-commander gets if he is on "leave or waiting orders." Now, I propose to go one step further in this matter of comparison—what kind of equality this bill establishes. The section of the law read above shows that a commander in our Navy when at sea gets $3,500; on shore duty, $3,000; on "leave or waiting orders," $2,300. The captain of the revenue cutter on the active list under this bill gets the same pay as the commander in the Navy, who outranks the captain of the revenue cutter even under the provisions of this bill. I will not carry the comparison any further. The facts are before you. In my opinion there can not be any doubt about this matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman, I think, does not want to be misleading.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly not, if I know it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then he will allow me to say that the difference of which he is now speaking grows out of this peculiarity in the naval service: The naval officers have a tour of duty, say for three years at sea, then a tour of three years on shore, and the lesser pay applies to the latter period. Now, in the Revenue-Cutter Service there is no distinction of that kind; the officers have no period of shore duty. They are constantly with their vessels, unless it happens that an officer is detailed for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the machinery of vessels or some labor of that kind. But in the Navy it is habitual for officers to divide their time of service between sea and land.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. If there is this distinction which the gentleman states, so that these revenue-cutter officers do go on shore a part of the time and the officers of the Navy do, then they ought not be treated as a part of the Navy, and they ought not get the compensation and emoluments and distinctions of the Navy without bearing its responsibilities, its duties, and its obligations, and they certainly ought not get higher pay.

Mr. MANN. May I make a suggestion to my friend from Alabama?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Quite a number of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are on shore duty all the time.

Mr. HEPBURN. There are 13 or 14 officers who are engaged, as I have said, in the construction of the machinery of vessels.

Mr. MANN. Well, there are quite a number who are steam-machinery inspectors traveling around the country and who under this bill would receive 15 per cent more pay than a naval officer would receive for the performance of similar duty.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The figures I have stated have been carefully prepared, and the only answer that my distinguished friend from Iowa can suggest is that these Revenue-Cutter Service officers do not perform shore duty at all, and in this it clearly appears that he is mistaken.

Well, now, what is the pretense for all of this, if you will allow me in the proper spirit to use that word, and I use it most respectfully? What is it? Why, we know that under section 2757—and it has been so since 1789—the President has the right to order these Revenue-Cutter vessels to cooperate with the Navy at any time that he sees proper, or that the emergency requires, and it is for that reason that you are asked to-day, as you have been asked in previous Congresses, to pass this kind of legislation. What else does the statute provide in that, and I call especial attention to it? The great argument here is the inequality while they discharge the same duties, says my friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]—the inequality of their pay. Why, a man in this country, in my humble judgment, is not entitled to any pay except that for which he labors and toils. Section 4741 of the Revised Statutes is in words as follows, and I read it:

The officers and seamen of the revenue cutters of the United States who have been or may be wounded or disabled in the discharge of their duty while cooperating with the Navy, by order of the President, shall be entitled to be placed on the Navy pension list at the same rate of pension and under the same regulations and restrictions as are provided by law for officers and seamen of the Navy.

This appears to put the Revenue-Cutter officer while he is acting with the Navy on the same footing with naval officers. I am not prepared to say how many have received the fruits of this benevolent provision of the law.

Mr. Chairman, I ask you during the consideration of this bill have you heard a word said about providing for the seamen mentioned in the section of the law that I have just read? Nobody is provided for in this bill except the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. That, in my opinion, is a marked injustice. The man, as I understand it, in all wars and in all great emergencies that threatens the life of a government is the private soldier with a knapsack on his back and a gun in his hand. He it is who does honor and glory to his country, and he it is who makes the proud names and reputation of generals commanding. But in this bill nothing is said about making provision for the seamen. I detract nothing from the names of the great military men of our country when I say this.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I read first from the report of the Chief of the Division of Revenue-Cutter Service published in 1897, and it is the only work that I have been able to see that gives a detailed account of the expenses. If there has been another, I should have been glad to get it. I have heard it discussed here about the appropriation made for the Revenue-Cutter Service—reciting the fact that the appropriation was equivalent to giving the details, but in this book the details are given, and I would not subject myself to the suspicion of engaging in something humorous and trying to ridicule this Cutter Service if it was not that I read from the book gotten up by the superintendent of the division himself. I treat the matter with the respect and gravity it deserves. I read now from page 52 of that book, and I call especial attention to the caption:

FROM JULY 1, 1896, TO JUNE 30, 1897.

The following examples of assistance rendered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, are given as illustrative of the character and value of the services performed by the Revenue-Cutter Service in one of its many fields of usefulness—

Mr. Chairman, it is a poor, unnatural creature that does not give the best side of his own case. Ah, we are all biased by our surroundings. In all the courts of the country and in all the relations of life self-interest suggests that we put our own side in its best light. This tendency governs the best of men in this country. I take it for granted therefore that they picked out the very best instances of that which would give character to the duties and the services they performed, and I will read them. I continue:

By the steamer Boutwell. Date, January 6, 1897. Location, mouth of St. Johns River, Florida. Yawl Cocheco. Home port, Providence, R. I. Number of persons on board, 1. Pleasure trip. Twelve days from Charleston, S. C., for Florida waters.

And I reckon if they had made a detailed statement of the services as they did in 1897, if they had made it for the intervening years, they would have something of this kind in it. Let me go on and read some more of them, and there are not more than a page and a half of them.

Date, April 26, 1897. Location, Mayport, St. Johns River, Florida. Sailboat. Number of persons on board, 2. From Pilottown to Mayport.

While a skiff under sail, with 2 persons on board, was crossing the St. Johns River she was struck by a squall and capsized. The dingy from the Boutwell assisted two boats from the pilot boat Meta in rescuing the occupants of the skiff, righting and towing her to the Meta, whereon the men were cared for.

Do you propose to put that character of service in connection with the magnificent Navy of this country? There never was a brighter or more hopeful prospect in the Navy of the United States than there is to-day, and the future promises to make it more useful and valuable than it has ever been in the whole history of our great Republic.

The coming future holds out that promise to the Navy of our country, and the people everywhere are in hearty accord, in my opinion, with all of its improvements and the assistance it will have in extending and broadening the great commerce of this country. Why, the history of the world shows that no people have ever had any fear of the navy. It is not a navy that overturns the liberties of the people. It is the man that wears the knapsack and the gun, and that is in the army on the land, the man on horseback, that the people have most cause to fear. Now, I failed to read in that first instance the history of the Cocheco.

The Cocheco, with two men, left Charleston, December 26 bound on a pleasure trip in Florida waters. Heavy weather blew them to sea. When off St. Augustine, one of the men left her in quest of assistance and is supposed to have been lost. The Boutwell came up to her ashore at the mouth of the St. Johns River; took her in tow to Jacksonville.

Let me give a more modern instance that serves to characterize the Cutter Service.

HEROIC RESCUE OF EA'S CREW—TAKEN FROM STRANDED STEAMER WITH DIFFICULTY BY WRECKING TUG.

NORFOLK, VA., March 22.

Captain Guarey and crew of 23 men of the Spanish steamer Ea, which stranded and went to pieces off Cape Lookout last Saturday, reached Norfolk this afternoon and left to-night on the Old Dominion Line for New York, from where they will ship for Spain.

The credit for saving the lives of the captain and crew is due Captain Coley, of the wrecking tug Merritt, of this city. In order to get at the men, the Merritt towed the members of the life-saving crew to the windward of the wrecked steamer and let go, the storm driving them in the way of the vessel, and 12 of the men were taken off and towed to the Merritt. This was done the second time, the boat being almost swamped beneath every wave, and finally the remaining members were aboard the tug. Here the Spaniards, not having eaten or drunk for four nights and three days, were given food and water and warm clothing, they being nearly frozen and half dead from exposure.

From the Merritt they were transferred to the revenue-cutter Algonquin, where they remained until brought to this city.

I naturally presume if a detailed statement had been made, as in the case of the Cocheco, that the mere fact that these 23 men of the Spanish steamer were transferred from the wrecking tug Merritt to the revenue-cutter Algonquin, that this would have been sufficient ground for the officers of the Algonquin to have claimed the 23 Spaniards among those whose lives were saved actually by the revenue cutter. If the director of the Revenue-Cutter Service had given us a detailed statement of the examples of assistance up to the present date, as he did in 1897, probably some light might be shed on the number of lives claimed in the majority report to have been actually saved. I presume that if they had made a report on cases of the kind just above referred to, the wrecking tug Merritt would have been simply an auxiliary to the revenue cutter, and it would have been advertised that 23 Spaniards had been saved from a watery grave by the dauntless heroism of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. That is the character of service they perform, except when cooperating with the Navy. I read the duties that the law requires of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I read from the report of the chief of the division, published in 1897:

The duties of the Revenue-Cutter Service, officially defined under the law, consist in the enforcement of all laws of the United States affecting the maritime interests of the nation, the arrest and prevention of illicit traffic by the sea; all navigation laws, compelling all kinds of craft navigating the waters of the United States to comply with the local requirements in regard to documents, lights, steamboat inspection, and passenger laws; the quarantine laws, the rescue and succor of distressed vessels and crews; the drill and discipline of life-saving crews, the supervision and construction of life-saving stations, and the entire inspection of the work of that service; the supervision of anchorage grounds established by law, the patrol and anchorage of vessels at St. Marys River, Michigan, etc.

These are the duties, and now I will state succinctly the objections that I have to this bill.

First, it proposes, Mr. Chairman, to retire civil officers on a pension of over $200 per month.

Second, its passage as a law will mark the beginning of a policy for the retirement of our Government employees when they reach 64 years of age on full pay.

Third, it proposes a 40 per cent increase of the present salaries of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service by adopting the longevity pay and fails to make any provision for the seamen of the service.

Fourth, the bill proposes to retire officers in actual service and give them higher pay on the retired list than they now receive on the active list.

For instance, captains now in active service receive $2,500 per year as their salary. Under this bill they would be retired at a salary of $2,625 per year for life.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him there for the purposes of a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly I will, with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that one of the objections of the gentleman to this bill is to be found in the fact that no provision is made in it for the retirement of the enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I hope I am mistaken about that. If it is, I should be glad to know that those privates are provided for.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of applying the retired principle to the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; I am not.

Mr. HEPBURN. You are not?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then why do you urge this as an objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. You mean the Cutter Service here?

Mr. HEPBURN. To any service that we have?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are you in favor of applying it in that way?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; I am not in favor of applying the retired-pay principle to officers and soldiers of the Army.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, no; to the enlisted men; that is what I want to know. You have urged here, as an objection to this bill, the fact that it does not provide for the enlisted men. Now, I want to know from you if you are in favor of applying the retired principle to the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy and the Cutter Service?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. In the first place, I do not favor the retirement of officers in the way it has been done here for some years past. But I will say this in answer to your question: That wherever you apply the principle of retiring and paying the officers, I think the privates who did their duty should have the same benefits.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, will you favor a proposition to insert in this bill the principle extending retirement to the enlisted men?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. No; because I am opposed to the entire bill, absolutely and unqualifiedly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then why do you urge that as a reason against the bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am opposed to it in principle, spirit, policy, and theory—everything connected with it.

When I was interrupted by my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], I was enumerating specifically my objections to this bill. Mr. Chairman, I am glad here in this presence to say that I heard with delight and pleasure a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNOCK] when he drew that magnificent parallel between the courage and bravery of the Federal and the Confederate soldiers. His tribute was one worthy of the transcendent courage that he so graphically described. It came from a broad mind and a heart filled with noble and patriotic impulses.

I admit that it filled me, as an old Confederate soldier, with pride to hear him speak of those brave men as American soldiers. I heartily congratulate him, and whenever an opportunity and time comes to me to reward these brave men of the Federal Army and their widows no man on the floor of this House will respond to it more cordially than I will. [Loud applause.] That is the feeling I have about it, but I do not believe that it is right in this revenue-cutter bill to advance these officers and give them immense pay upon a civil pension list and ignore the seamen, who do their duty and do the work.

I return now to my specific objections to this bill—the fifth one—and I want gentlemen to listen to it, as I have examined it, Mr. Chairman, with all the care and ability that I possess in the short time that I have been a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: By act of Congress authorizing a permanent "waiting-orders list" in the Revenue-Cutter Service, on which list a captain, at his own instance and request, is placed and receives a salary of $1,250 per annum. On the waiting list under this bill such captain would receive a salary of $2,625 per annum. He is on the waiting list by the law, and he gets $1,250. Under this bill he would get $2,625 per annum. Examine for yourself the figures I give you. Are you going to do that?

In other words, an officer already retired, already drawing $100 a month and something over that, unable to perform any service, under this bill will get something over $200 per month. Paying a man for service that he can not render; taking him from a "waiting list," where he is now, where he is given with his own consent and on his own application $1,250, and putting him on a retired list at $2,625. That is the bill, and no one can deny it. The question is pertinent. What reason is there for this extraordinary liberality? And the sixth ground of objection is an important one. It organizes and creates a separate and distinct arm of the Navy, without imposing the obligations, discipline, and responsibilities of the Navy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that my time is expiring. The great objection I have to this bill, after these many statements about it, is the far-reaching and dangerous precedent that it establishes. That is what Secretary Long was talking about. It is to-day but a cloud not larger than my hand on the governmental horizon; but it will not be long until that cloud will cover the entire governmental horizon with its dark shadows, and we will see the lightning's flash and hear the thunder roll when it will be too late to retrace our step, after we have inaugurated this policy and created a civil pension list in this Government. The powers will be too strong after once entrenched to dislodge them. They will dictate legislation. Such a policy as this bill fosters belongs to a monarchical form of government; it has not a place in the institutions, principles, theories, and conceptions of this great Republic of ours. It is creating a preferred civil list for civil officers. It creates a pampered, favored class, and to show the drift of public opinion I will ask the Clerk to read the paper which I send to the desk.

[Philadelphia Inquirer, March 22, 1902.]

PENSION FOR SUPERANNUATED WORKERS.

A disposition to make some better provision than the poorhouse for men and women who, after working hard all their lives, find themselves in their old age without any means of support is one of the most salient and encouraging signs of the times. It is a disposition which has been manifested in various ways and in almost every direction; but there has been a more rapid progress along that line of development in the Old World than there has been in the United States, so far at least as regards the intervention of the Government. There are countries where a system of pensions paid by the state has already been established. To bring about the institution of such a system is the aim of the Socialist party in France, an aim toward whose attainment the Waldeck-Rousseau ministry has pledged its assistance, while it is a well-known fact that to soothe the declining years of the worn-out worker and to save him from the humiliation of "going on the parish" has long been one of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's dearest ambitions.

He saw taken in the House of Commons the other night a step, though not a very long one, toward its realization. The aged pensioners' bill, which then passed its second reading, embodies the ideas upon this subject which Mr. Chamberlain has frequently expressed. It is framed in such a way as to avoid discouraging its expectant beneficiaries in the exercise of thrift, and it provides that every working man and woman who shall have passed his or her sixty-fifth year shall receive, out of the public funds, a pension for life, which, though necessarily small, shall be sufficient to insure a decent subsistence. It is proposed that the money required, which is estimated at between fifty and sixty millions of dollars, shall be provided in equal parts between the local authorities and the National Government. And this radical measure, involving as it does a wide departure from all precedent, a measure which not many years ago any British Parliament would have repudiated as revolutionary, was passed on second reading without any serious opposition from either side of the House.

It is true that its enactment at the present session is not expected. The unsatisfactory condition of the national finances consequent upon the enormous drain of the South African war renders the imposition upon the tax-paying classes of a supplementary and avoidable burden impracticable at this time. The significant thing about what has happened is the ready and virtually unanimous acceptance of the principle which underlies the proposed innovation, namely, that the man or the woman who after a life of useful labor is left in old age without means of support has a right to ask that the community shall provide him and her with something better than the pauper's portion, and that the existence of a need for such provision shall not be accounted a disgrace. This is a widely different theory from that which still prevails and which has only lately been questioned. At present public assistance is given to the aged needy, not as a right, but as a gratuity, from whose acceptance humiliation is inseparable. The new view is that it can be claimed as a right and accepted with no more discredit than attaches to the receipt of a military pension.

"The new view," Mr. Chairman, as declared there in that paper, a leading newspaper in this Republic, published in one of the largest cities of the United States—"the new view" is contained, yea, the germ of it lies latent, in this bill which we are to-day considering. Now, it is time, when these things are being manifested, when these evidences are being given, for us to order a halt before we go too near this precipice. Inaugurate this policy, Mr. Chairman, and why are not the officers of the Fish Commission, of the Marine Service, and the various others I could mention, to be added to the list? What evidence have we of this "new view" here in the bills now pending in this House tending to creating a civil-service pension list?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will it interrupt the gentleman to yield to me for an inquiry?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am delighted at the position the gentleman takes in opposition to a civil-pension list, and especially that Mr. Secretary Long is opposed to a civil-pension list. How does the gentleman from Alabama stand, and how does the Secretary of the Navy stand, upon the question out of which has grown in this country to-day practically a larger pension list than there is in England, against whom you are inveighing?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Larger civil list? Do you mean a larger military-pension list?

Mr. GROSVENOR. A larger civil-pension list, grown out of the operations of the so-called civil-service law.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, well; I would be very glad to answer my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] in any way that I can. I do not know much about that, but I can tell you cheerfully that I have never had much patience with the civil-service policy, except as to the consular service and some other duties. I believe that when the Republicans are in power they should control the offices. I believe that they are able to find men in their own party that are good, honest, and straightforward enough to fill these offices, and I believe, too, that when the Democrats are in power they ought to control the offices and fill them with Democrats. That is my idea about it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But under the administration of that law 40 per cent of the cost of the administration of the civil-service side of the Government is confessedly a civil-pension payment to-day. Nobody will doubt that, and yet when it comes to pensioning the men who do the service in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the country, Secretary Long seems to be condemning civil pensions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am frank to say that I am not acquainted with that feature. I have read what ex-Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, and Secretary Long both said about this bill, and I agree with them about it fully. I was delighted the other day, Mr. Chairman, to hear that a distinguished gentleman on this floor—and we all take pride and have pleasure in seeing any member of this House promoted to higher honors and a more responsible position—I was also delighted to hear the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY], who will soon take that grand portfolio, the Secretary of the Navy, vote on the matter of the rule on this bill in a manner indicating his opposition to this bill. I say I was glad to hear him.

Now, Mr. Chairman, look at the tendency, the trend, of the public mind. It behooves Congress more than it ever did on any occasion at any period in the history of this country to use its power in checking and stopping the increase and growth of that civil-pension list. If it is true, as the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] says about the civil-pension list that has already been created, then my argument is still stronger, and we ought not to go any further with it. Look at the different bills introduced into this Congress. Here is one "to increase the efficiency of the public service by the retirement of superannuated employees." Here is one for "the retirement of Government employees in the classified civil service and the establishment of a retirement bureau." Another for the "retirement of Government employees in the classified civil service without cost to the Government." Here is one for the appointment of a "superannuated commission." Another "to prevent superannuation in the classified civil service." Still another "to classify the railway postal clerks and prescribe their salaries."

REASONS FOR URGING SPECIAL LEGISLATION IN FAVOR OF RETIREMENT FOR WEATHER BUREAU EMPLOYEES.

- (1) They work three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. Their hours of duty are long. On the Pacific coast the first observation is made between 4.30 and 5.30 a. m., while on the Atlantic coast the offices can not be closed before 11 p. m., and often later. They must be on the alert at all times to detect the first premonitions of storm development, and remain constantly on duty in order to distribute warnings that may be received at any moment.
- (2) They are subject to great vicissitudes of climate, being required to serve, as the exigencies of the service may require, in almost any degree of latitude, from Alaska to the West Indies.
- (3) By reason of the peculiar organization of the service its employees are, like officers of the Army, in a great measure deterred from obtaining a fixed habitation or enjoying the privileges that accrue to long residence in a community. Changes of station generally operate to their financial disadvantage.
- (4) It requires many years of experience in the Weather Bureau to become thoroughly efficient in the higher duties of the service, and constant study is necessary in order to keep pace with the developments of meteorological science. The most efficient men are those who entered the service when they were young and vigorous, and gained proficiency as a result of study of the weather conditions as they were daily presented. The observers of the Weather Bureau are on guard to give warning when danger threatens, so that measures of safety may be taken by those whose lives and property are in jeopardy.

And so it goes on, Mr. Chairman. It is already growing up in the railway service. We have various instances of it where they are regulating the retirement of their employees. Whenever you start that thing it is like knocking down a row of bricks—you hit the first one and they all follow after a while. It is tending to teach the public mind first to become reconciled to it and next the Government will be asked to help in it.

I read now from the General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service in his annual report of 1901, in which he says that—this office has been very persistent in its efforts to secure some legislation in the way of relief bill or superannuation act to provide for our permanently disabled and worn-out clerks.

They are all drifting that way. Now, Mr. Chairman, I see that my time has about expired, but I would like to publish, and I ask leave to print some data that I have and am unable to read. In conclusion I have to say that I have not one iota of partiality or bias or prejudice about this matter. I am looking at it from the general broad standpoint, not whether these officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are worthy or not, not whether they discharge their duties efficiently according to their line of duty—that is not the question; but it is a far-reaching precedent that this bill creates; it is the far-reaching effect of it that once you get it started in this Government you can never stop it.

As I said before, it is against the inspiration of our great Republic, it is against the teaching and precept of all the great men and all the great parties in this country from the time of the organization of our Government down to date. Of all the leading statesmen, none of them have ever, that I know of, countenanced this idea of creating a civil-service pension list. Because the President has the power under the statute to order the revenue-cutter vessels to cooperate with the Navy for the time being, we can not say that that takes from them the civil features when they remain in the custody and under the care of the Treasury Department, where they have been for over one hundred and ten years. [Applause.]

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to send to the desk and have read the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Grand Lodge of Ship Masters' Association at a convention held in the city of Washington, D. C., January 23, 1902.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE.

Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate:

Whereas there is now pending before your committee Senate bill 1025, for the promotion of the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and

Whereas that service is universally recognized as a most important auxiliary in aid of commerce, in the enforcement of the navigation laws, and all laws appertaining to maritime affairs; and

Whereas we deem it of the utmost importance that said service shall be maintained in the highest state of efficiency: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Shipmasters' Association in annual meeting assembled, That the Senate and House of Representatives be earnestly requested to enact said bill into law.

J. A. WARD, Grand President.

Attest:

E. G. ASHLEY, Grand Secretary.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, I believe that completes the indorsement from every maritime organization of the United States, and they all favor this bill and every provision of this bill now before the House. In addition to these indorsements, numerous commercial bodies, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, national boards of trade, seven State legislatures, and numerous other bodies, political and commercial, have indorsed this legislation. If at any time in my life I ever doubted the propriety and wisdom of this legislation, these indorsements, coming to us as they have, would be ample justification for me to, in my feeble way, support this bill most heartily.

I will not attempt to reply to the gentleman from Alabama at length; but I could not fail to notice a few of the observations that he made while he was on the floor in reference to a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Long. Mr. Long wrote the letter referred to, but it applied to a bill then before Congress, and that was the Fifty-sixth Congress. Mr. Long has never written or spoken a word against the bill now pending in this House. The objectionable features in that bill, if they were objectionable, have been stricken out, and this is a modification of that bill, against which the Secretary has urged no objection.

Nine months after the Secretary, Long, had written that letter, to which reference has been made, his chief, the lamented deceased President of the United States, wrote an indorsement, in his message to this House, of the bill then pending; and it is admitted by all that this is a much more acceptable measure than that; yet the President of the United States committed himself fairly and squarely to the bill before the Fifty-sixth Congress. And I know that if the Congress of the United States had passed that bill the President would have been more than delighted to sign it.

Nine months after the Secretary of the Navy had written that letter referred to, criticising the bill, I say, the President lent his indorsement to the same bill then pending before Congress; and you have never heard a word of objection out of this great civil-service reformer since that time.

So much for that part of the case of the gentleman from Alabama. I was surprised, Mr. Chairman, that a member of this House would squander ten or fifteen minutes in talking upon a letter written by a great Secretary pertaining to and touching a matter that is not before the House at all.

He also spoke of the duties of the Revenue-Cutter officers. I say to him now that the duties performed by Revenue-Cutter officers are more valuable, more complicated, more in number, and require greater experience and ability than the duties performed by any other officials of the Government of the United States. And I say to him, in addition, that every officer in the Revenue-Cutter Service knows that when the President so orders in time of war it is not left to his discretion to say whether he will go into active service in that war; but it is left to the President of the United States to issue his order, and every Revenue-Cutter and all Revenue-Cutter officers are compelled by statute to cooperate with the Navy. That is provided for in section 2757 of the Revised Statutes.

I say here and now that, notwithstanding the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Illinois, the Revenue-Cutter officers stand abreast of the naval officers or the Army officers. They are as well equipped to perform their duties in peace and war as the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps. I say that the instructions and the duties of cadets on board the training ship, and the qualifications required when they are examined to enter as cadets, are such that it can not be otherwise than that they must have the same requirements as Navy and Army officers.

I make the further assertion, and will undertake to prove it within the thirty minutes given me, that all this charge about these officers being civil employees is absolutely misleading. They are a military branch of this Government and have so been characterized by every Secretary of the Treasury since 1872; and not only that, but some of the Secretaries of the Navy have so characterized them. And reviewing the history of this country from 1790 down to the present time, those statements have been verified by the history of our country for more than one hundred years. From 1790 down to the civil war and the war with Spain there never has been a bugle sounded or a drum tap beaten to arms when the revenue-cutter officers have not responded and have stood shoulder to shoulder with the Army and the Navy. Then why will gentlemen insist here in this House that if this bill passes it simply provides for a civil pension list? Such a remark is absolutely misleading.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to enter into some details that have not been touched upon thus far and to give a history of this service from its inception down to the present time. If the House will bear with me I will read from the record compiled from the statutes of the United States and orders from the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States.

This service was organized in 1790 by Alexander Hamilton, eight years prior to the organization of the Regular Navy. It took an active part in the war of 1812. There is where this service began its military experience, in the war of 1812; and this branch of the service covered itself with glory then as it has done on every occasion since that time.

In the war with Mexico a number of cutters cooperated with the Navy—as many as could be spared from the Revenue-Cutter Service at that time. In 1858 the cutter Harriet Lane formed a part of the Paraguay expedition (this was in time of peace), and the services rendered by this ship were the most valuable of any in the fleet, as stated by the commanding officer of the squadron. Many of these vessels cooperated with the Navy during the civil war, as all know, and the revenue cutters were in active cooperation with the Navy during the recent Spanish war, as I will show later. There are, approximately, 200 officers in this service, but by adding cadets the total number is about 220.

Officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are regularly commissioned and can be dismissed in identically the same manner as officers of the Army and the Navy. They are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They are given rigid physical and professional examinations for entrance to the service, and for promotion to each of the grades above where they enter. The seamen are regularly enlisted for three years, uniformed the same as seamen in the Navy, drilled with large and small guns the same as in the Navy. Of the 229 officers who will be affected by this measure, 88, or over 25 per cent, of them saw active service in the civil war. Without casting any reflection upon the Navy, because God knows I love the Navy as well as any man on this floor, it will be pertinent to remark in this connection that in the naval service to-day there are scarcely 5 per cent who saw service in that war.

In glancing over the minority report upon this bill (S. 1025) my eye fell upon this paragraph:

Under the bill as recommended by the committee, every one of these torpedo boats or torpedo-boat destroyers would have been subjected to the command of a revenue-cutter captain if the two boats had happened to meet in joint operations on detached duty. It seems to us that it would be extremely unwise to place naval officers, specially trained by the Government for the purpose, who may be in command of naval vessels, under the command of revenue-cutter officers, who are without training in methods of warfare, when the latter happen to be serving on auxiliary duty with the Navy in time of war.

I want the House to remark those words, "who are without training in methods of warfare." Now, let us examine and see what the studies are. Let us see what these officers have to attain to—what the requirements are under the law and under the orders of the President of the United States. The studies pursued on board the Chase, and that, by the way, is the training ship for revenue-cutter cadets, are of a strictly technical character and are such as to fit the cadets for their duties as revenue-cutter officers. The course lasts two years, and it embraces the following subjects, the regular officers of the service being the instructors. We do not have to go outside to hire professors; we furnish our own professors. The revenue-cutter officer is the teacher. Now, what does it teach these cadets?

Seamanship, practical and theoretical; nomenclature, wooden and steel vessels; rules of the road; law of storms; sailing and handling of small boats; composition and official correspondence; lectures on professional subjects; navigation, practical and theoretical; nautical surveying, practical and theoretical; magnetism of iron vessels; compensation of the compass; charts and tide tables; piloting; international law, if you please; artillery drill—mark you, artillery drill for these "civilians," so called; mathematics; plane and spherical trigonometry; gunnery (for these "civil" employees, as we are asked to believe them so be), practical and theoretical; infantry tactics.

Who would have thought it? Who would have supposed this was the curriculum, in view of the remarks that have been made by gentlemen who oppose this bill? Target practice, large and small guns; broadsword exercise—who would have believed that? What becomes of civilian theory? Then comes astronomy; laws relating to navigation; signals, service and international codes; fencing; pistols; hygiene; first aid to the injured; resuscitation of the apparently drowned; minor surgery and the practical use of drugs, and I believe nearly everything is taught aboard the Chase that is taught in the Navy except dancing. They do teach dancing in the Navy. We have never adopted it in the Revenue-Cutter Service; we make the other fellow dance when we meet him in armed conflict at sea. [Applause.]

Now, here follows the studies. Length of course in Naval Academy, four years, and two years at sea, and at this point I desire to call attention to the fact that revenue-cutter cadets are much more advanced in their studies when they enter the service as cadets than naval cadets. I remember last year in the appointment of a cadet to Annapolis. I ordered a competitive examination, and the boy that passed and took the highest prize out of seven would have failed in an examination for cadet in the Revenue-Cutter Service; but when that boy went to Annapolis he passed with high honors. But these cadets must have a college education, or, in other words, they must be just about as far advanced when they apply as cadets and have their examination as the cadets that have been at Annapolis for two years at least.

And then, in addition to this, they must go aboard to the training ship Chase for two years. And, gentlemen, I desire to say to this House that if I had a son for whom I desired a high education and practical instruction to meet the tides of life, to stem the adverse currents that we are called upon to stem in business and in other affairs of a practical nature, I would say that if he could enter this service as a cadet and go aboard of the Chase for two years and receive this instruction, that he would be fitted for any walk in life, except the great professions that require special training.

Candidates for appointment as cadets must be graduates of a college or first-class high school. Their examination is more severe than for entrance to the Naval Academy. The following subjects are enumerated, and they must be proficient in these subjects:

Spelling, geography, history and Constitution of the United States, grammar, composition and rhetoric, arithmetic, algebra, trigonometry, logarithms, chemistry, general information.

Now, that is the starting point in this Service. The cadet must pass a creditable examination in these studies, and then, in addition to this, he must take his two years' training aboard the training ship Chase. And I am told by disinterested persons, who are competent to judge, and who have boarded that ship, that there is no ship afloat where the discipline is more strict and the requirements more severe than aboard of that training ship Chase. In view of these studies, and in view of all other requirements—proficiency in target practice, in the handling of rifled cannon, in pistol shooting, cutlass, rifle, and infantry drills—I am surprised that some of these gentlemen do not propose to disarm these "civilians," so called, and take their arms from them, to take the big guns from off the ships and arm them with tooth picks and bologna sausages. [Laughter.]

Why, it is ridiculous to make such charges on this floor, that these officers are civilian employees. It seems so strange that this great Government of ours will put aboard of the Gresham, for instance, 100 rifles, 100 revolvers, 100 sabers, and 4 rifled cannon, with these so-called "civilians" to handle them. It is strange, indeed, is it not?

Engineer officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are unlike engineers in the merchant service. It has been charged that they are better paid than the engineers in the merchant service. I am here to deny that proposition, and I am ready to furnish the proofs.

The engineers in this service must be better equipped than engineers in the merchant service, inasmuch as they are required to be graduates of technical colleges when they enter the lowest grades in this service. Moreover, they may at any time be detailed to design and superintend the construction or repairs of machinery of the revenue cutters, and they must be qualified to respond when called. They are also detailed to inspect all the materials entering into the construction of the hulls, machinery, and equipments of the vessels of the service. All machinery is designed by officers of the service themselves, and they receive no assistance from outside experts, as is the case with merchant vessels. On board ship they must drill the men in their force. Now, think of it, in view of what has been asserted by the opposition, the engineer force, if you please, must be drilled in the handling of large and small guns. What is the matter with these civilians again! And they must be drilled in the various evolutions which are required on armed vessels of the Government.

It will be proper for me to say at this point, Mr. Chairman, that the engineers of the Revenue-Cutter Service are just as efficient, and I have it from high sources in the Navy that some of them are more efficient than the average engineer in the naval service. These men, who are drawing the magnificent sum of $1,800 a year, and some only $1,500, are able to take the material from which the engines and boilers are made, in its crudest state—pig iron, if you please—and convert it into steel, and by their drafts and designs convert it into engines and boilers, air pumps, condensers, and propeller wheels, and they do it themselves, without calling outside assistance. They can determine its tensile strength, its ductility, and everything about it, and they know when it is fit to go into this machinery. They do not have to go to an expert or professor to teach them that duty.

How often in the merchant service do you find an engineer who is even capable of setting up an engine in proper shape? It is not expected of them. Even after the engine is constructed not one out of ten of them can put it into the boat so as to get the best results. And yet, Mr. Chairman, many of these engineers in the merchant service are receiving to-day, right on the lake which is in front of the district represented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], greater compensation than some of these officers on board our cutters.

Now, gentlemen, this idea of their being inspectors of the life-saving stations has already been exploited. We know there is no question but what the Life-Saving Service owes its efficiency to the revenue-cutter officers. I have stations in my district; I have a station within 4 miles of my own home, and I know that regularly twice a year a first lieutenant of this service comes there to drill and practice with that crew, and I know that if he did not come that service would not be as efficient as it is, though I think that station has the best captain and crew I ever saw.

Now, as to the armament of revenue cutters. The vessels in the Revenue-Cutter Service and the naval vessels are the only classes of Government ships which are armed; and yet I heard the gentleman say yesterday, while opposing the rule to consider this bill, that light-house boats and marine-hospital boats were on all fours with the Revenue-Cutter Service, and that they formed a part of the blockading fleet off Santiago and Habana. Let me state to the gentleman that there were revenue cutters there, and every revenue cutter was under a revenue-cutter officer, and every light-house boat and hospital boat was commanded by a naval officer detailed for that purpose. There is the difference.

They never expected that a revenue cutter should be under any other command than a revenue-cutter officer. He is equipped at all times for peace or war. He reads the signals from the flag-ship and follows the evolutions as directed, and he fights like an American citizen for his country and its flag. Every revenue cutter is provided with rapid-fire guns of the most improved type. Each vessel is fitted with a magazine. In the magazine are modern rifles, a cutlass, and a Colt's navy revolver for each man in the crew, and they are taught how to use them effectually in time of war. In the Spanish-American war the revenue cutters which cooperated with the Navy carried a total of 61 large guns.

Now, let me stop right here to remark in the gentleman's opposition to the rule to consider this bill he was very careful not to mention anything about these boats that were cooperating with the Army. I find that in addition to the cutters that were cooperating with the Navy and carrying 61 large guns that 7 revenue cutters were cooperating with the Army, carrying 13 guns, which the gentleman purposely, carelessly, or unintentionally omitted from his statement. The larger cutters are fitted with a 15-inch torpedo tube, and in a very short time, on account of their great speed, can be fitted up as torpedo boats, and when thus fitted they do not have to detail a naval officer to command them. These modern revenue cutters are the fastest vessels of their size and type in the country. They average from 5 to 7 knots an hour faster than vessels of the same size in the Navy.

And, further, illustrating the competency of these revenue-cutter officers, they design their vessels, they inspect the materials that enter into them, they supervise their construction, they have the selection of the material that goes into the engines, they design them, they draft them, and supervise their construction, and put them into the boat when completed, and not one has ever failed to meet the requirements set forth in the specifications. In the views of the minority it was stated that the revenue cutters cooperate with the Navy only in time of war. Such is not the fact, as they have frequently been put in cooperation with the Navy in peace times, notably in the Bering Sea patrol and in the joint cooperation for the suppression of filibustering along the southern coasts prior to the Spanish war. During the Spanish war such cutters as were not cooperating with the Navy were detailed to cooperate with the Army, and did very efficient work in the guarding and patrolling of the submarine-mine fields which were located in all the principal harbors.

I desire to speak just for a moment of one of the officers in that service, as I think his name will be familiar enough, and the House will agree with me that he is entitled to some consideration. I speak of Lewis N. Stodder, who was a master in the Navy during the civil war, who volunteered to pilot the Monitor during her memorable fight with the Merrimac, and to Stodder's skill as a pilot on this floating fighting machine much is due for the victory won that day. He is the sole surviving officer of that historic vessel, and is at present a captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service, on duty in New York City, as supervisor of anchorages. And I might say right here in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that until two years ago another officer of this service (Lieutenant Howard) distinguished himself in the civil war, but he died two years ago, covered with glory and filled with patriotism, and always ready to meet the demands of his country in peace or in war. I desire to say also that there is now in the Revenue-Cutter Service a lieutenant who was an assistant engineer on the Merrimac during her conflict with the Monitor, and he is a brave and worthy officer.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I have briefly outlined the history of this service, and if I have stated it correctly, I ask any man how he can consistently characterize it as a civil-service branch of this Government? I say now and here that it is a part of the military force of this country, and so long as the Navy and the Army have been given the distinguished honor and emolument that accrue to them by reason of the retired list, I say you can not consistently deny the same honor and the same advantage to the revenue-cutter officers. You talk to me about these officers being civilians. They are civilians in time of peace in a way, and so are the naval officers, as well as the Army officers. Thank God we are not always at war. We are a nation of peace, but when war comes we are mighty, either in the Army or the Navy or the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MINOR. Why, certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is a fact, is it not, that the nature and the character of the Revenue-Cutter Service have not changed since it was organized in 1790?

Mr. MINOR. No. I said "No." I want to qualify that. It has changed to meet conditions as they arose. Originally, in 1790, the cutters were sailing boats, small sloops, and two-masters, 100 or 150 tons burden. To-day they are steamships; some of them measure 1,400 tons and are able to travel 20 miles an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MINOR. It has been asserted here, Mr. Chairman, that these revenue-cutter officers are amply paid for services rendered. It is said in the minority report that the duties are not laborious, not arduous, not extremely dangerous. I assert that all that is wrong and misleading; but granting that it may be so for the sake of argument, I desire to say that I had occasion last night to go through what is called the Blue Book, where all the employees of the Treasury Department are listed and their salaries given. Now, I do not want to reduce the salary of a single employee of the Government. I know what it costs to live in Washington. I have been here eight years with a family, and there is no place like it. They will beat you by day and they will beat you by night. It is a skin game from start to finish. [Laughter.] Therefore I have no desire to cut down the salary of a single person of the Treasury Department; but this will, I think, strike the House as remarkable.

I took up the list of female clerks in that Department, and Lord knows I love them all and have no desire to see their salaries cut, and they know it [laughter].

Mr. DAHLE. Even if they are 80 years old.

Mr. MINOR. Yes; age makes no difference for purposes of this discussion. [Laughter.] Now, I found one receiving $1,800, or the same as a first lieutenant or chief engineer of this service. A first lieutenant, who takes charge of the machinery aboard one of these great cutters that is armed to the teeth, and who is responsible for the lives of these men; who goes to sea and stays there nine-tenths of the time, and who is an able and efficient officer, able not only to command one ship but to command a fleet of them, he receives the same pay as this one woman does, who works in a comfortable office about six hours each day. I found 32 women receiving $1,600, $100 more than a second lieutenant or a first assistant engineer. Think of it! The second lieutenant, under the rules and regulations, is required to step upon the bridge of one of these cutters and take her to any port in the world where there is water enough to float her. He is responsible for the property, responsible for the lives of the people aboard of his ship, and yet he receives less pay than each of these 32 women.

Then there are 105 of these ladies receiving $1,400 a year, or $200 more than a third lieutenant or a second assistant engineer. Think of it! A second assistant engineer or a third lieutenant, nominated by the President for life, confirmed by the Senate, adorned with shoulder straps, which I know is objectionable to some people, but they are an honor to their country, and they stay in that service and perform substantially the same duty as the Army officers and the same as the naval officers. I find also that 224 ladies receive $1,200 a year, or the same as a third lieutenant and a second assistant engineer. I say the time has come when some measure of justice, so long withheld, should be meted out to these men. They are patriots; they are efficient men; they are educated men; they deserve well at your hands. They have always bared their breasts to the leaden hail in time of war; they have ever been ready and willing to protect this country and its flag. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, the title of this bill is "To promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service," and such is its purpose. I am in sympathy with the suggestion made by Secretary Long in his letter to this committee last year, where he says that this service ought to be a part of the Navy. I believe that one of the evils of this Government, and a growing evil, is the duplication of bureaus—the duplication of material and officers of all kinds. I never could understand, indeed it was a revelation to me to know that a service of this character, both of the magnificence and strength of the revenue-cutter boats, armed with guns and appliances, fit to wage battle against any fleet, was a part of the Treasury Department of this Government.

It seems to me to be an anomaly that this should be under the control of the Treasury of the United States, which results and must result in a duplication of armament, in a duplication of supplies, in a duplication of material, and in a duplication of men. And while I might more readily favor and support a measure which joined this with the service to which it naturally belongs, in my judgment, that we might have a greater, a grander, and a larger and stronger Navy under one single and controlling head, and that while I believe much is lost of the efficiency and of power in the disputes and contentions as to what officer shall control and what policy shall prevail, at the same time, in the investigation I have given this subject, I have become satisfied that this service of our Government has not received fair treatment; and I am satisfied that this bill will in a measure at least right the wrong that has been done to those who, I believe, are our best educated, best trained, and most efficient men.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman referred a moment ago to the immense size of the revenue cutters. May I ask him if he has informed himself of the size of the vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I do not pretend to have the accurate and technical information that the gentleman from Chicago has. I have not had an opportunity to confer with the gentleman, but in a general way—

Mr. MANN. I am giving you that opportunity now.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes, sir; I appreciate it; and I thank the gentleman kindly for this school of information. But in a general way I have some information on the subject; and I have gained some from the report submitted to accompany this bill, which says that the boats of the revenue service now being constructed are of substantially the same strength, the same size, and the same efficiency as the great boats that are being built for the Navy.

Mr. MANN. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Official Register—

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I have that "Blue Book." I have had sufficient influence to secure a copy, and have acquainted myself somewhat with the information therein contained. But I will permit the gentleman to put that in his speech when his time comes.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman does not care to have it in his speech, as it might break the symmetry of his remarks.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, I expect everybody will read your speech and very few will read mine. Therefore the country will be far better served if the gentleman will embody it in his speech, where the country will see it. I appreciate the gentleman's kindly generosity and thank him for it, and trust that he will now be content to let me proceed.

Mr. MANN. I simply wished to know whether the gentleman was proceeding in his attitude toward this bill on the theory that the revenue-cutter vessels are of the same size and power as the naval vessels, because I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the largest vessel in the Revenue-Cutter Service is of less than 900 gross tons, which would hardly fill the space of a coal apartment in a naval vessel.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, I have seen a number of big men who did not do a big amount of work, and I have seen some small men and some small boats that were fully ready for effective duty, as I will show farther on.

Mr. MANN. I do not question that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It is not the size of a boat or the size of a navy or the size of a man that actually controls this question. It is the efficiency of the Service that I talk for, and I want to say that, in my judgment, this Service and the men that are in it, who are as honorable men as there are in our country, have been shamefully overlooked, misused, and snubbed, socially and every other way, by the men of the Navy, who want them to become and be subordinate to them.

I want to say another thing. They may not have as large boats under their command, and they have not as large salaries, I am sure. They may not have as much influence, and an order recently went out from the Treasury Department that they should not even write a letter or have a conference with a Congressman or any other representative of the Government looking toward the betterment of their condition. But while it may be true that they do not sail such large boats, do not stand so high socially, I want to say that no member of this organization ever objected to the promotion in the ranks of a young man who was efficient and in every way qualified for the place simply and solely on the ground that he did not have the social culture, the social standing, and the social refinement to entitle him to the place.

One of the evils of our Navy, and of our Army, too, is this social aristocracy. [Applause.] I do not care whether a man belongs to the Army or the Navy or the Revenue-Cutter Service, the official who says—and puts it in black and white—that a man shall not be promoted because of his want of family, because of his want of social refinement or standing, expresses ideas that are abhorrent to the growth and the dignity and the honor of American manhood. [Applause.]

While these men on this Service may not man as large boats as the gentlemen of the Navy, I want to say to you that they are manning boats; they are not in command of office desks. I wish I might embody in my remarks this cartoon that appeared in the Post yesterday morning of your gentlemen of the Navy sailing the seas on office desks, seated in easy chairs, entitled the "Squadron that Sweeps the Spoils."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. May I have five or ten minutes more?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I will yield the gentleman ten minutes more.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And I for one, while it is in my mind, was pleased that the President of the United States in his message saw fit to call the attention of Congress to this evil of men in the Navy and Army holding civil positions; men educated at Government expense to fight the battles of the country seated to-day in Washington and other places behind mahogany desks, in easy chairs, drawing the salaries of civilians; and I honor the President for that part of his message in which he says it is their duty to get out upon the seas and to follow the fortune or the fate of the flag. Statistics furnished me show 585 graduates of West Point and Annapolis to-day holding civil positions. Now, my friend from Chicago, I ask you to name a man who was ever in the Revenue-Cutter Service who holds a place behind any office desk in this world.

Mr. MANN. You do not really want it, do you?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I could not live if you did not give it to me.

Mr. MANN. Because there are quite a number of them.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I have another argument that appeals to me in favor of this service. Perhaps by reason of my birth and early training I am a man of peace. I should be a man of peace, and I always hope to be a man of peace. It was the doctrine of my father and mother and for generations before them. I may have fallen a little from the high estate of the honest Quaker, but I still cling to the old faith of peace on earth and good will toward men.

Now, the sole purpose of the Navy and the sole purpose of the Army is to take life. The purpose of this Department, except when commanded by the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy to do so, is the business of saving life. They are engaged in the undertaking of taking life only at such times as the perils of war warrant their being called into service. For this reason I am able and willing and pleased to support this bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does the Navy take life at any other time? You say these people take life only when it is necessary. Does the Navy take life at any other time?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; I think not. I would not imagine they did.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I thought you were arguing that it did.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No, sir; they do not take life except in time of war, but I have yet to learn that they of the Navy ever went out into storms hunting for chances to save life. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. And they do not take their lives in their hands at any other time.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; it is not a perilous business. [Laughter.] The safest business in all this world is to be a high officer in the Navy of the United States. [Laughter and applause.] It always has been safe, and it will be a good deal safer since our last brush with Spain, because, in my judgment, there will be no people on the face of the earth that will ever get within gunshot of us again. [Applause.]

But what I was going to suggest was that I want to call attention to some of the appropriations of Congress for these two Departments that do nothing but take life and some of the appropriations for this Department which does nothing but save life. Now, the appropriation for this Department is a little over a million dollars. In 1894 we appropriated something over twenty-four millions for the Army; in 1895, twenty-five millions; in 1896, twenty-three millions; in 1897, twenty-four millions, and so on—I will supply the figures later—in 1900, eighty millions; in 1901, one hundred and fourteen millions; in 1902, one hundred and fifteen millions.

Now, let us turn to the Navy: In 1894 we appropriated twenty-two millions; in 1895, twenty-five millions; in 1896, twenty-nine millions; in 1897, thirty millions; in 1898, thirty-three millions; in 1899, fifty-six millions; in 1900, forty-eight millions; in 1901, sixty-one millions, and over seventy millions by the last Congress. Now, I submit that it is a better policy to appropriate large sums for this Department that saves life. Now, what do the officers say? These great boats of the Navy go out onto the deep sea; they are out in midocean, where in reality there is little danger.

They patrol and police the far-out waters. These revenue cutters hug the shore, the rocky places, the shoals, and the places of danger. That is where these men are to be found, and I want to call attention to and make as a part of my remarks the statement made by Admiral Melville in speaking of this service. He says:

Although the Revenue-Cutter Service is, under existing law, under the cognizance of the Treasury Department, yet it is, always has been, and must necessarily be a military maritime organization. The service by law is made to enforce every statute that pertains to the protection of the country.

That is the business of this department. They patrol the coast for those who are violating the revenue laws, who are violating any of the laws of our country. This great Navy, for which we appropriate such large sums, is simply brought into requisition for actual service and actual good in times of war, except that I believe it is our duty to have a large Navy, a strong Navy, and a strong force, to be able to assert our rights and to maintain the dignity of the country at all times.

It is strikingly significant that just as soon as war is declared the service is practically drafted into the Navy and incurs every danger and peril that the regular men-of-war are subjected to. Does it not seem paradoxical that the men and ships of this organization are presumed to be in condition to be drafted at immediate call to the work of war and yet be not disciplined enough to fulfill the duties of the Navy in time of peace.

Such are the words of the man who knows what he is talking about. These men who are patrolling the seas, collecting the revenues, boarding boats, and looking after the interests of the Government, are expected to be sufficiently efficient on a moment's notice to take charge of their boats, to man the guns, to fight the battles of our country; and yet the minority here say that in times of peace they should not rank with the Navy.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to this:

The ships that have been constructed during the past five years for this service will compare very favorably, in speed and armament, with the best of the Navy gunboats.

For over forty years I have seen the ships and known the men of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I have watched these vessels leave port upon the approach of a gale to patrol the coast in the hope of rendering assistance to any ships that might have been unfortunate enough to have been cast on the beach. I have seen these revenue ships in the Arctic Ocean hanging close to the ice pack, so as to afford immediate relief in case any of the whalers should be nipped in the floe. It is because I have seen this heroic work done that I have carefully studied the work of the organization. For over fifteen years I have had personal conferences with the superintendent and engineer in chief of the service, and I know of the efforts that have been made by these executive heads to only take into the commissioned personnel young men of character, professional efficiency, and high integrity.

As for the engineers of the organization, their professional training and education have been of such nature that in a short time I would have no hesitation in intrusting to their charge the care and management of the machinery of our best war ships. I believe that the percentage of men and officers who meet violent deaths in line of duty is greater in the Revenue-Cutter Service than it is in the Navy. The officers and men of this service have made sled journeys of hundreds of miles over the roughest kind of country in their attempt to carry relief to the shipwrecked whalers.

Both officers and men are proud of their organization. The cleanliness of the ships and the general discipline maintained show that all hands are imbued with the best traditions and customs of efficient military service.

The work of the Revenue Marine is a more dangerous occupation than that of the Navy, because the duty of the first organization is to police the coast, while the Navy really polices the ocean. It is seldom that a ship is now lost at sea. It is cruising along the coast that is dangerous, and this is the special province of the Revenue Marine.

Every reason that can be given for the creation of a retired list for the Army and Navy is applicable to that of the Revenue-Cutter Service. There is not a day when every man in all three organizations is not subject to call for perilous duty. The personnel of all three bodies is subject to military as well as to civil trial for various offenses. In entering all three services the civil rights of the individual are abridged and military responsibilities assumed.

The pay received by the officers of the Revenue Marine is not at all commensurate with the service rendered. The uniform of these officers differs but little from that of officers of the Navy. As the work of the service is in tropical as well as in arctic waters, the officers are obliged to keep on hand clothing of all descriptions. Since the only allowance given the personnel of the organization is a "ration" amounting to about 30 cents a day, it is necessary for all the married officers to practically keep up their individual homes, as well as to contribute a share of the mess expenses on board ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I should like two minutes more. I have just one word further that I wish to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I will yield five minutes to the gentleman if he wishes it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The minority of this committee make no answer to the report of this Admiral. They make no disclaimer of what he says, of the facts he states; but they say that certain other services are just as much entitled to this consideration as this service.

Now, in conclusion, I want to call attention to this: The first cannon shot fired from any gun on any vessel in the war of the rebellion came from a revenue cutter; and is there any doubt of the gallantry and efficient service of Capt. D. B. Hodgson, who commanded the McCullough, the first boat that fired a gun in Manila Harbor? He, with the McCullough, was surveying in the port of Hongkong, engaged in an occupation of peace, but the cable of the President of the United States warned him to prepare immediately to engage in a naval battle which was to change the history of the world, and he steamed forward and was the first man at Manila to fire a shot in the engagement that sunk the Spanish fleet and sent down the Spanish flag. I believe that men of this character, who do this kind of work, should stand on an even plane and be entitled to the same protection, the same conditions, at equal salaries with the officers of the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to engage in any general discussion of this measure at this time, but the argument of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] would be sufficient, so far as I am concerned, to cause me to oppose this bill.

The fact that the Army or the Navy, or both branches of the service, are overpaid, if they are, is to my mind no argument and no satisfactory reason why the pay and privileges of the Revenue-Cutter Service should be increased. The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that I have never yet been able to find any good reason why any class of the military or other service of the Government of the United States should be entitled to pay after retirement. I do not believe that the man who voluntarily gives his services to the Army, to the Navy, or to the Revenue-Cutter Service, or to the purely civil branches of the Government, or to Congress, if you please, can give any good reason why he should receive pay in the nature of a pension after he has passed the age of his usefulness and after enjoying his salary while engaged in such service.

The truth is that the high order of pay and the high order of distinction given to some branches of the public service in this country has given life to a social and military class of aristocracy described by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and we should rather seek to correct the evils on that line, which will only be increased by this bill. The truth of the business is, that to continue this whole system of legislation, to my mind, strongly tends toward the building up of an official class, an aristocracy in this country, as contradistinguished from the American citizen. [Applause.]

The eulogies paid by the gentleman to those connected with the Revenue-Cutter Service is an uncontradicted testimonial of its efficiency. I have heard no complaint that the service is decaying, or that the service is becoming less efficient now than it has been. The Service has been eulogized by every gentleman who has advocated this bill. If under the present laws, with the present pay and with the present privileges, they secure for this branch of the service thoroughly efficient service, I know of no reason why it ought to be changed. This service, like the service in the Army and the Navy, is not a compulsory service. There is no service of the Government, civil or military, that is a compulsory service. If it was compulsory, and a man compelled or obliged to spend his life in that service, for which he is not paid sufficient to save something for a rainy day, then there might be some excuse for taking care of him in his old age.

In other words, if you have compelled the service you would be under obligations to protect him from want when he is too old and otherwise incapable of rendering that service. It is claimed on one side that the duties in the Revenue-Cutter Service are largely military, and on the other that they are purely civil. I do know that this service in time of peace lies along the lines of the civil duties of the country. We know that this service is where it ought to be, under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. These men may be called upon to perform perilous duties at times. There is hardly a branch of the active executive duties involved in the Government that does not carry with it some chances and some dangers.

You might as well tell me that the deputy marshal or the marshal who takes his gun in his hand or his pocket and goes out to round in the wild-catters and gets killed, that their service being so perilous they ought to be pensioned after they go out of office. Ah, this is simply a growing evil. It is no answer to me that those in the Army enjoy retired pay; it is no answer to me that those in the Navy enjoy retirement and service pay. It is no argument that this service should receive it, because I do not believe it ought to be given to any service in this country. Our Federal judiciary receive retirement pay. That is no reason why that evil ought to be extended any further than it is. The truth is, if I had the opportunity, and if I had the power, I would take it away from all those who now enjoy it. [Loud applause.]

When a man undertakes to do duty for a fixed salary I would pay him that salary, and would pay him a salary that would be sufficient compensation for the service rendered. If it was not, then the salary ought to be directly increased; but I would not say to the men who were enjoying the fat places of the land and the high offices of the land, where exertion is in a large measure laid aside, that because they had the pie and stood at the pie counter until they are 64 years old that after that time they should be retired upon pay without rendering any service.

I would rather, sir, if I had to make my choice between the two propositions, turn my eyes to the real heroes of the country; I would rather go to the man who, in the fields, in the mines, and in other industrial pursuits, is striving day in and day out, through evil as well as good report, to earn enough to sustain himself and his family, and when he gets too old to render that service to himself, when he has no protection except such as he may have been able to lay up for a wet day, and bestow the gifts of the Government upon him. Therefore, to my mind, while this man is struggling for his living I would rather give it to him than the man who is enjoying the fat salary, and the fat place, and holding the offices, when there are thousands of men equally as competent who would be glad to enjoy such privileges.

Mr. Chairman, the very example cited in the two instances referred to a moment ago, in the civil branch of the Government, covering the judiciary and those in the military and naval service enjoying retired pay, is beginning to produce its evil results. We hear every day clamorings for a civil pension list; claiming that the man who surrenders so much to accept a salary greater than he ever enjoyed before, in some department of this Government, and wears himself out in drawing his salary, shall be placed on a pension roll and given retirement pay after he gets too old to work. It is not right, Mr. Chairman; it is not just. It is not just to the people or the Government. I care not what the service is, the man who voluntarily engages to render this country service for a stipulated salary ought to be required to look to it that he saves a competency for himself in his old age.

If that is not to be the rule, it is impracticable that the other rule should be universal. In other words, it is much more of an argument to my mind much more substantial justice would be accorded by helping men who did not enjoy these privileges during the strength and vigor of their manhood rather than adding to the profits they have enjoyed during that period after they become too old to render such service.

The proposition in this bill carries with it, to my mind, an additional evil, because, from the debate here, it is evident that the service of these men is largely within the civil sphere. They carry guns, their duty requires them to drill, they may be called into military service of the Government in time of war, and if they do God knows that the laws of the United States provides ample protection for the care of those who serve in the wars of the Republic.

If you are going to base it upon that, extend it to that great class of people, the real heroes, that in every struggle of the Republic from its inception down to this time, who, when danger is abroad in the land, do not wait for orders, but rush to the rescue of their homes and their country. Do not build up these classes while those honest, patriotic men who love their country because they hope their country will allow them in the race of life to enjoy equal rights and common protection—do not put before them the picture of the injustice, and, in its ultimate consequences, the iniquitous proposition of giving men service pay or longevity pay after you have paid them ample salaries.

It will not be calculated to make the bone and sinew of the country love their Government more. Any law that leads in the direction that those in the military service or in any other service of the Government are for that reason entitled to more beneficence from this Government than the honest man who by his daily struggle earns his bread, but who has never been permitted to enjoy the privileges of a lucrative salary, is pernicious and wrong. If we continue upon the course already begun, if we take the one step by passing this bill and place these 300 officers in this category with first an increase, as the report states, averaging 40 per cent of their salaries, and not only that, we give to them the service pay, which is a certain per cent additional for the time they have served, and beyond that retiring them at the age of 64 or upon the certificate of an examining board approved by the President, carrying them to a permanent waiting list, with compensation at full pay for life, I ask you, gentlemen, where it will all end? As was well said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], who preceded me, it is to not only retire them, but to retire them on greatly increased pay.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not only that, but you give them larger pay than the corresponding officers receive in the Navy.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the suggestion; that was one proposition that I had not discovered in the brief investigation I have given the bill. But it only shows the tendency of the times. By this bill you put these men and their salaries at more than those enjoy for like offices in the naval service. To-morrow some friend will come and present a bill, saying that it is an injustice to the American Navy that you are paying these men in a civil branch of the Government more salary than you are paying corresponding officers in that great military arm of the Government. No man will be heard to say let us reduce these salaries, for God knows that when once they take the step upward, when once a salary is fixed at a certain amount, you might just as well try to turn over the Rocky Mountains as to undertake to repeal a bill of that sort in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill brings to the attention of Congress a subject of the utmost importance. Shall we establish a civil pension list? Undoubtedly the constabulary of the revenue department, a bureau of the Treasury Department, performs essentially civil duties. It will not be contended that United States marshals and their deputies, and other officials connected with the enforcement of the excise laws throughout the war country, are not civil officers. The Revenue-Cutter Service may be called a marine constabulary, performing on the seacoast substantially the duties performed on land by similar officials. It is said that they may be drafted into the naval service at any time during war.

That is true, but from 1865 until 1898 no emergency arose by which these Treasury officials were in fact drafted into the naval service, and there is nothing to indicate that in the next generation a single one of them will be drafted into the naval service. On the contrary, we may fairly indulge the expectation that no such duty will be required at their hands. If gentlemen here consider that temporary service in the Navy should entitle them to enjoy the rank of naval officers while so employed, with a place on the retired list later, it would have been better to bring forward a bill providing that when these revenue officers shall be called upon to perform the duty of naval officers they shall stand on terms of equality with naval officers of similar rank. Assuredly the possibility of their being required to perform such service can not justify this measure.

This brings to our attention another problem. Probably the most notable of all the abuses of the monarchy—probably the one which first and last has to a greater extent than any other called down on the heads of the monarchs the wrath of the people—has been the distinct recognition of the government class as such, the imputation being that all the people of the country must bear burdens to the end that those next to the source of power may enjoy unearned emoluments. The civil lists of kings have been justly denounced as the meanest and most unjustifiable abuse of personal government and as inimical to the general welfare. Now comes a proposition that sounds in the same doctrine. It is undoubtedly true that recently in this country there is a tendency to the distinct recognition of the governing class as such. The motive power of legislation such as the measure under consideration is the opinion—entertained not only by those in the employment of the Government permanently, but by some of those temporarily called to the legislative halls to enact laws for the Government of the country—that when one enters the Government service the burden of providing for his future support may be justly imposed upon the Government—that is, by the taxpayers.

Now, under somewhat similar conditions to those existing in the thickly populated parts of our country a similar problem arises in all the countries of Europe at this time, but government employees are not the subjects of the benefices proposed over there to superannuated dependents. A generation ago the extent to which the individual throughout the German States and principalities was independent from his cradle to his grave was remarked by all writers on the subject. There were fewer almshouses, less necessity for public charity, in the German States than in any other part of Europe. Industrial conditions have changed. Germany has taken on the modern industrial system, by which a growing number depend from day to day and from the cradle to the grave upon their ability to earn subsistence by performing manual labor in a manner satisfactory to a taskmaster, obedient to the new conditions produced by the new industrial order. Germany now pensions aged laborers. Not only in Germany, but wherever the modern industrial system has been fully developed, those dependent solely on labor for a living find themselves, in old age, superannuated and unable to maintain themselves. The civil pension list is the result. But, mark you, it is the laborers and not classes who, in the period in which they are capable of earning comparatively lucrative salaries, who are eligible to this benefice.

The pending measure is based upon the theory that the Government owes a peculiar duty to those engaged in one particular branch of the Government service. Is this position tenable? If we should undertake to provide for deserving indigents, how would we proceed to ascertain who would have the fairest claim upon the taxpayers of the country, high-salaried employees of the Government or aged laborers who have never fed upon the public bounty? Do you say we should pay attention first to those who may be summoned to the defense of the flag? That would include every healthy male citizen in the country; for in an emergency justifying it all would be subject to that requisition. But the friends of the bill say those employed in the Revenue-Cutter Service are more liable to be called into the service than the rest. I think I have shown that such a thing is only a remote probability, and that this contingency could be dealt with more suitably by legislation dealing directly with it. Besides, of their own volition, the employees enter the Revenue Service at salaries, I will say, at least as large as they could command in private employment, and may quit the service at their pleasure.

What good reason can be advanced in support of the proposal to establish a civil pension list? Is not the salary of the average Government employee larger than that paid for similar services in private employment? Are not Government employees more secure in the term of their employment, less subject to the vicissitudes that attend men in private life, and in every way in a better position to lay by something against the approach of old age than those who perform similar work in private employment? In case of a few weeks' sickness do the salaries of high public officials cease? If for the purpose of preserving his health a well-paid public official concludes to make a brief journey or enjoy a season of recreation, does his pay cease? No; the public servants for whom there is so much solicitude are accorded privileges and enjoy immunities unknown to those engaged similarly in private life.

Is it not true, then, that they, more easily than any other class of our citizens, can lay by a competence for old age? Is it not true, also, that first and last they enjoy opportunities of every kind and description—social and otherwise—unknown to those in private life? Now, if they do enjoy all these things, where can we find excuse or apology for placing them on the retired list, and during their natural lives pay them large salaries?

In the course of the debate mentioned one gentleman censured the social discrimination practiced by Army and Naval officials in their dealings with the employees of the revenue service. Why, sir, in this respect the revenue officials are not alone. We must expect that those who wear epaulets will assert social exclusiveness and constitute an aristocratic group more or less amusing and certainly harmless. I may remark, in passing, however, that the wearers of epaulets enjoy no monopoly in snobdom. There are others. How often do we read in the newspapers that in official swelldom a controversy is raging as to whether at an approaching function at the White House or at one of the foreign embassies this or that lady shall have precedence in the receiving line? What a grave problem it is, to be sure, this question as to just what order shall prevail in assigning persons to posts of distinction in social functions! Whether the wife of this dignitary or the wife of that dignitary shall stand at the head of the line at a pink tea! I do not see how these questions, highly important though they may be to the parties to such controversies, can cut a figure in this discussion, except it be to emphasize the silly pretensions of those who imagine that here, as at the courts of kings, individually and collectively, those in public life are disposed to take on the airs of a governing class. Snobbery is one way of indicating this feeling. Demands for peculiar immunities and emoluments is another.

Meantime the American people will continue in their everyday life to assign positions of distinction in social life to those who, on democratic grounds, seem to deserve them, and will continue to be sometimes amused and sometimes angered by the antics of official snobdom.

If the amusing pretensions to which attention has been called are of any value in determining the merits of the pending measure they furnish an argument against it. Probably one thing that makes some of our public officials less democratic than those who placed epaulets on their shoulders is the fact that our laws mark them as of the elect, and they take the lawmaker at his word. They are only living up to the full measure of the opportunities we give them. Each member of Congress has the right to appoint students at the Naval and Military Academies.

In my district this honor is disposed of by a competitive examination, and the boy who wins the prize enjoys it. He may be the son of a blacksmith or the son of a washerwoman. He may be a bootblack off the street. Whoever he may be, whatever circle he may be drawn from, if he be built on the snob pattern, which unfortunately is not unfashionable, forty years hence he will strut the streets of this capital enjoying half or three-quarters pay, living up on quality hill. He will have forgotten his origin as utterly as if he had not in his boyhood days known humbler walks of life. Fortunately this is not universal, or even the rule, but cases like that I have sketched are not infrequent.

I do not object to three-quarters pay for military and naval officers. Whether I would sanction it as an original proposition or not is immaterial. It is an established system and will never be disturbed. It rests upon reasons in no way applicable to the civil service. I know some gentlemen who are engaged in the Revenue-Cutter Service. Doubtless they prefer it to private employment or they would not be there. Probably some of them have made life a burden to Congressmen and Senators, who, of course, were glad to secure first employment and then promotion. Now comes this bill for their promotion to the grade of naval officers. They probably had good employment at home. Why did they seek employment here? Was it understood when they obtained employment in the Revenue Service that they were to be secure in their positions throughout the period of their usefulness, and receive thereafter, until death, pay for services which they will not perform?

Was it understood that when they accepted places at good salaries that they might spend their salaries, regardless, paying no attention to provision for the future, leaving all that to a beneficent Government? Are we to say to a young man who becomes identified with this branch of the Government service that thereby he becomes identified with the governing class and is henceforth a ward of the taxpayers, who until his death must support him? I do not think so. Go to the various departments and you will see gray-headed men and women who have been in service a long while. These old people can not possibly maintain themselves much longer. Can we afford to put them on the retired list? If we are to enter upon this kind of an inquiry, why not pursue it further. If old age and indigence are to be grounds for paying largesses out of the Treasury, why not take into account the aged in private life, whose circumstances are no better, and probably a great deal worse, than those in the Government service?

In the sunless and starless caverns of the earth, in the mines, at the mouths of the blazing forge, in employments both dangerous and unwholesome you will find in private employment men grizzled with age, who, in their walk and way, have faithfully served their country. They have been good citizens, have supported their families, educated their children, paid their taxes, and contributed their full share to the general weal. Shall you say to those, why, you did not get Government employment. Then you might have been provided for in old age. If you had obtained a place in the Government service, old age would have been provided for.

Mr. Chairman, I fear the time will come when modern industrial conditions will compel all governments to take notice of the necessities of the superannuated laborer. Given the full development of the system which is so rapidly consigning so large a portion of the people to the estate of wage-earners, tell me what is to become of the man who, without skill, or very little skill, performs the rough, hard, arduous labor of the world.

Singular it may be, but it is true, that the common laborer is in an essential respect the mainstay of society. He populates the world. In town or country this holds true. In the laborer's hut and the humble habitation of the tenant farmer the large families are found. Thus is consumed from day to day his meager earnings. What is to become of the common laborer a little later on, when modern industrialism has found complete development?

Some economists have prescribed as a remedy for the difficulties and troubles of the laborer the limitation of the family circle. They would solve the problem by limiting the procreation of the species. Only one great civilized nation practices this formula, and its population, undepleted by extensive emigration, remains at a standstill, and everywhere the phenomenon witnessed nowhere else except in France is regarded as a national calamity.

In conclusion, I desire to say that I believe that Government employees, are better paid than any other class of employees in the country and have a better opportunity to provide for old age than any others; therefore they should not be singled out for special governmental benefices. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much time has been consumed on our side?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized for thirty minutes.

In anything that I have to say upon this bill I wish to distinctly disavow any intention to raise a question even concerning the courage, the ability, or the motives of the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service or of those officers of the Government who have to deal with that department. I have no doubt that in both war and peace this service is officered by men courageous and able.

It is the spirit of the American genius which permeates the Revenue-Cutter Service, as it permeates all classes of our people when they enter either the regular or the volunteer service in time of war or when they are engaged in time of peace. But the question which is presented to Congress is one which seems to me of so much importance that we do not need to regard the present personnel of the service in order to determine whether they are right in asking additional privileges. I make no complaint in reference to their conduct. In the little examination which I have endeavored to make of this matter I have received extreme courtesy at the hands of Captain Shoemaker, the chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and of the men in his office, for which I have to and do now return to him my sincere acknowledgments.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], when the matter was up as to whether the rule should be passed for the consideration of this bill, stated, referring to me:

He has charged that officer of this Government, whose duty it is to make reports of facts, to state truths, that year after year he has lied in the discharge of his official duty. Is it not time there should be some inquiry with regard to a matter of that kind, and that the gentleman should be given an opportunity to make proof of reckless and irresponsible charges of this character? I think that the House must have been satisfied when the gentleman took his seat that at least he should have an opportunity in a proper and a legitimate way to make good some small modicum at least of these grave charges.

Mr. Chairman, more language of the same sort was indulged in by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, for whose ability no one has a greater respect than I have. But, Mr. Chairman, it was not I who charged that the officer of the Government lied. I made no charge in reference to any officer of the Government. I only endeavor to state facts. What the result of those facts may be is for the House to determine.

It is a matter of complete personal indifference to me whether this bill becomes a law or not, except that I construe it to be my duty as a member of the committee reporting the bill to lay before the House such information, which may bear upon the question, as has come to me.

I stated on Thursday last as a reason why this matter should not be considered at all at the present time that the Revenue-Cutter Service, through the Secretary of the Treasury, or, if it pleases the gentleman better, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Revenue-Cutter Service, together or singly, had not complied with the law, which requires them to make a detailed statement of their expenditures. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] endeavored to answer that proposition by saying that they did make a detailed statement of the expenditures. I called the attention of the House to the act itself upon this subject, included in the sundry civil act making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at its next session a detailed statement of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1888 under the appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and annually thereafter a detailed statement of expenditures under said appropriation shall be submitted to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

That statute remains in force, unrepealed, and yet the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], denying that there had been a failure of compliance, called the attention of the House to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates of appropriations, and in this letter, transmitting the estimates of appropriations, there is no pretense of giving a statement of expenditures. The only items in the estimate on page 289, which the gentleman from New York cited, are items under a column which is headed, "Estimated amount required for each detailed object of expenditure," which means for the ensuing fiscal year. I leave it to the House to judge whether I accused the Department of anything, or whether I stated anything which was not absolutely true.

In this column and under this heading there are 11 items, aggregating the sum of $1,482,545. Even if these items related to the expenditures of the past year at all, which they do not, they could hardly be called a detailed statement of expenditures. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] might have called attention to the fact that these 11 items of estimates were based on Appendix S in the Book of Estimates.

The deficiency bill approved March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 907) provided that the annual estimates for the Revenue-Cutter Service should be given—in detail, showing separately the amount required for pay of officers, rations for officers, pay of crews, rations of crews, fuel, repairs and outfits, ship chandlery, and for traveling and contingent expenses. He shall also include in the annual Book of Estimates a statement showing the authorized number of officers and cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service, their rank and pay; also the number of men constituting the crews of vessels in said service.

Notwithstanding the positive requirements of the act of October 2, 1888, the Revenue-Cutter Service does not even pretend to furnish a detailed statement of the expenditures for any fiscal year. The appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service has always been made in a lump sum. The Revenue-Cutter Service makes a sort of compliance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889, requiring a detailed estimate of the money required for that service for the ensuing fiscal year, but in every estimate so submitted the Revenue-Cutter Service has insisted that it could get along with less money if the appropriation were made in bulk than if made in specific items, and through this means it has continued to secure a bulk appropriation each year for which it makes no report to Congress, notwithstanding the statute positively requires a detailed report of the expenditures.

Not only this, the act of March 2, 1889, requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall include in the annual Book of Estimates a statement showing the authorized number of officers and cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service, their rank and pay, also the number of men constituting the crews of vessels in said service.

The effort to comply with this statutory provision is found in Appendix S of the last Book of Estimates. The statute says that the statement shall show the authorized number of officers and cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is admitted and known that there are cadets in the service, but in Appendix S there is no reference either to the name, rank, or class of cadets, nor any statement concerning them or referring to them whatever. Nor is there any statement referring to cadets anywhere in the Book of Estimates. Evidently the Revenue-Cutter Service does not wish to call attention to the fact that there are cadets or its favoritism shown in their selection. It is the policy of the Revenue-Cutter Service to keep everything, so far as possible, under cover and in the dark.

According to the official register of the service dated July 1, 1900, there were 18 cadets. Each of these cadets draws a salary from the Government, but the Book of Estimates does not show any cadets or ask for any appropriation for their pay.

The requirement in the statute that the statement shall contain the number of men constituting the crews of vessels in said service was evidently intended to require the number of the crew of each vessel, so that Congress might know the number of men employed on each of the revenue cutters. This intention of the law is skillfully evaded. The statement furnished in the Book of Estimates does not pretend to give any information concerning the number of men constituting the crew of any particular vessel and does not furnish information of any special value in consideration of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The statement furnished is, for example, in the following form:

	Per month.
1 seaman, at.....	$56
25 seamen, at.....	45
7 seamen, at.....	40
14 seamen, at.....	37
40 seamen, at.....	35
3 seamen, at.....	32
39 seamen, at.....	30
40 seamen, at.....	28

The theory of the requirement of the statute is wholly ignored.

The items relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service in the Book of Estimates, including Appendix S, are not by any means a proper compliance with the act of 1889, and they are not even a pretended compliance with the act of 1888.

I hold in my hands a copy of the sundry civil bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, which is the act of October 2, 1888. This contains the requirement about a detailed statement of expenditures annually from the Revenue-Cutter Service, which I have quoted before, and it also contains, in precisely the same form, a similar requirement of detailed statement of expenditures from the Smithsonian Institution.

I hold in my hands now House Document 31 of this session of Congress, being a detailed statement of expenditures of the Smithsonian Institution for the last fiscal year. The amount appropriated annually for the Smithsonian Institution is only a small portion of the amount appropriated for the Revenue-Cutter Service, and yet this detailed statement of expenditures by the Smithsonian Institution covers 47 pages of finely printed matter, giving in detail the expenditures for the year. This is a proper compliance with the statute. The Revenue-Cutter Service does not comply with the statute, makes no report of its expenditures, but demands a civil pension list and other privileges.

LIVES ACTUALLY RESCUED FROM DROWNING.

In the debate the other day on the question whether a special rule to consider this bill should be granted or not I called attention to the difficulty of obtaining information concerning what the Revenue-Cutter Service has done or is doing, and stated that there was a disagreement between the report of the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the number of lives saved and the report of the officers of the revenue cutters themselves. I did this at the time, not for the purpose of finding fault with the Revenue-Cutter Service, but for the purpose of showing the necessity of waiting for action until we could have published proper reports of this Service, so that we might know the facts and learn whether the facts justified granting any special privileges to the officers of this service.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has endeavored this morning to answer and refute my statement in regard to the 103 lives which were credited to the revenue cutter Gresham August 13, 1900. I called his attention at the time to the fact that I had received and held then in my hands a copy of the detailed report of the captain of the Gresham in reference to that occurrence, and in this detailed report occurs the following:

Number, names, and residences of persons actually rescued from drowning? None.

I stated the other day that if this report had been published it would so show, that no lives were "actually rescued from drowning." I think even the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will admit that I was right.

I did not make the statement at the time for the purpose of attacking the Revenue-Cutter Service, but simply for the purpose of urging upon the House that there was not sufficient information before it upon which to intelligently act upon this bill.

But now that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] has undertaken to show that 103 lives were "actually rescued from drowning" by the Gresham from the barkentine Fraternidade on August 13, 1900, I wish to briefly present to the House the information which I acquired in regard to this and the method pursued by me.

The Revenue-Cutter Service is, I believe, the only branch of the Government which makes no annual report, so that I could not acquire information in regard to the operations of the service from any report made by it. The only report in regard to the Revenue-Cutter Service for the last year is found in the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 54, and, so far as it relates to the actual operations of the Revenue-Cutter Service, occupies about one-fourth of a page. This portion of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury was, of course, prepared by the chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service. In this report the Secretary includes several items, the second one of which is the following:

Lives saved (actually rescued) from drowning, 178.

Now, what was the purpose of putting this item in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury? It was plainly for the purpose of showing what important duties the Revenue-Cutter Service is performing and the great service it performs to the people on the sea and to our country in the matter of saving lives.

I did not have time or opportunity to investigate all of the claims put forward by the Revenue-Cutter Service, but I concluded I would ascertain as to the truth of this item, and if the Revenue-Cutter Service had actually rescued 178 lives from drowning for the last fiscal year, I would give them credit for efficient work in that respect, and if they had not performed this good work I should feel extremely sorry that anyone had reported the item as published.

This is what I found. In the office in the Treasury building of the Revenue-Cutter Service is a volume which contains, on page 64, "Consolidation of record of vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service for the year of 1900 and 1901." One of the columns in this consolidated record is headed "Number of lives saved," and this is the only reference to life saving in the consolidated record. The total under this heading is 178, and in the number to make up this total the revenue cutter Gresham is credited with 104. An examination of the monthly consolidated record of the Gresham shows that that vessel is credited with 103 lives saved in the month of August, 1900, as entered up in this same volume in the Revenue-Cutter Service Office. For that month of August the Gresham is credited with having assisted two vessels in distress, the two vessels having a total value for vessels and cargo of $83,000, with 111 persons on board, and 103 lives saved.

The two cases in which the Gresham rendered assistance to other vessels in August, 1900, were the cases of the Fraternidade, August 13, 1900, and the White Wings, August 19, 1900. The White Wings had only 8 persons on board, and none of these was taken off that vessel.

According to the consolidated report, therefore, the Gresham saved 103 lives from the Fraternidade on August 13, 1900. By the time this report had gone through the monthly and yearly consolidation and through the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and appeared in print in his annual report it is stated that these 103 persons were actually rescued from drowning, and this notwithstanding the report made by the captain of the revenue cutter Gresham, August 15, 1900, regarding the assistance furnished to the Fraternidade that the "number of persons actually rescued from drowning" was "none."

I will ask leave to have printed in the RECORD papers which have been sent to me by the Revenue-Cutter Office in regard to this occurrence. These include a letter from Captain Walker, of the Gresham, as well as his detailed report. The letter from Captain Walker, as furnished to me, is not complete. It is sufficient, however, to show that no lives were "actually rescued from drowning" and that the revenue cutter and its officers incurred no danger or hardship whatever in the matter. If a complete copy of the letter had been furnished to me it would have shown this fact in still stronger light. But the detailed report of Captain Walker absolutely establishes the fact that he did not pretend that he rescued one person from drowning, much less 103.

I do not deny, Mr. Chairman, that this revenue cutter at that time performed efficient service. It would be strange if, with 40 vessels in the Revenue-Cutter Service, they should never come to an occasion where they might perform service to a vessel in distress. They performed such service in this case. It is the one case during the last year where they performed greater service than any other which I have been able to discover; but I deny that they rescued any lives from drowning, if the report of the captain of the cutter itself is correct. I do not know what they did. I only know what the report says, and I say that the report of the captain says they rescued no lives from drowning, while the tabulated report when made up says that they at that time rescued 103 lives from drowning.

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to conceal in this matter. All the information which I have obtained I lay before the House.

I found that the revenue steamer Galveston, located at Galveston, Tex., was credited with saving 40 lives from drowning at the time of the hurricane at that city in September, 1900, and I asked the Chief of the Revenue-Cutter Service to furnish me a copy of the report. I shall ask leave to print this in the RECORD for what it is worth.

What we want and what we ought to have some time before acting upon a bill like this is a report from the service showing what they do. I listened to the distinguished gentleman from New York, who occupied an hour, and who stated at the beginning that he would tell what duties the service performed; but I failed to hear him tell a single duty which they do perform. I will be very glad to hear upon this floor what the Revenue Service of the country does. I know what the law says it shall do. It says, among other things, they shall "protect the timber reserves;" but I apprehend it is seldom they get their boats on a forest reserve. What they do is one of the mysteries which I have been unable to fathom. We ought to have an annual report.

Now, the law which requires them to submit a detailed estimate of expenditures is not the only law they observe in the breach. There is also a law requiring each department of the Government to furnish a list of all its employees, to be published in the Official Register, known as the Blue Book. So far as my observation has gone, every other branch of the Government service publishes a complete list of its employees. Those branches of the Government which have vessels publish a complete list of the men upon them. The only branch which declines or which has neglected to comply with this provision of the law is the Revenue-Cutter Service; and it seems to me that we are entitled to information upon that point before we act upon a bill like this.

There are other provisions of the law which they do not observe, and which they have not pretended to observe. There are some which they have pretended to observe, but have not succeeded in observing according to the provisions of the statute.

But, Mr. Chairman, these observations have all been addressed to the consideration of the merits of the bill at this time. That matter has been passed upon by the House.

The bill has been ordered taken up, and we have to come to the conclusion as to whether the bill, in the light of the information which we now have, ought to be passed. What is the bill, and what is its purpose? Broadly stated, this bill proposes, first, to increase the pay of Revenue-Cutter officers by giving them 10 per cent increase for each five years' service up to the 40 per cent increase. This is based upon the provisions of the Army and Navy pay. It is not my purpose to enter upon any discussion concerning the Army or the Navy. Some of the gentlemen who have addressed the House in favor of this bill, notably the gentleman from Michigan, seemed to think it necessary to attack the Navy. I do not propose to enter upon a defense of the Navy. It requires no defense from attacks of that kind. I do not know—and I am frank to admit it—that I should favor, if it were a new proposition, if I had a chance to oppose it, the proposition to put men upon the retired list as now done. I think it is generally admitted that the retired list, both in the Army and Navy, has become a grievous burden in many respects.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. When a new proposition of this kind was made four years ago to put the Navy officers on the retired list with an increased rank, with the pay and emoluments of the grade above them, did you not vote for that proposition?

Mr. MANN. Well, my recollection is, Mr. Chairman, that there was no roll call upon that matter. I was not very favorable to the proposition, I may say to the gentleman; and I may say to him further that in my opinion the Navy personnel bill would never have passed the House if the House had understood its provisions in regard to increasing the rank and pay on the retired list.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think I find the name of MANN—M-A-N-N—among the list of yeas voting on the passage of that bill. I do not know that there was any other gentleman of that name in the House except my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If there was a roll call upon the bill, Mr. Chairman, I undoubtedly voted for it. I was much younger in experience then even than I am now in reference to such matters. If I had been in the House as long as my distinguished friend from Iowa has been, I should not have voted for that bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, in order that the gentleman may ease his conscience by declarations of that character, and with reference to his statement a moment ago that there was no publication of the persons employed in the Revenue-Cutter Service in the Blue Book, I wish to call his attention to page 252 of the first volume of the Official Register of the United States, commonly called the "Blue Book."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MANN. I am very glad to yield, because I see the gentleman is making a mistake, which I will be very glad to correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think he will find the names of all the officers and of all the vessels set forth on pages 252, 253, 254, 255, and 256.

Mr. MANN. And I will call the attention of the distinguished gentleman to the law with reference to the Official Register. It says that there shall be included within this—a full and complete list of all officers, agents, clerks, and other employees of said department, bureau, office, commission, or institution connected with the legislative, executive, or judicial service of the Government or paid from the United States Treasury, including military and naval officers of the United States, cadets, and midshipmen.

And if the gentleman can find the name of any clerk, employee, or any other person upon a Revenue-Cutter vessel other than a commissioned officer, I will abandon my speech and quit the opposition to this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. All of the clerks, I am informed, are under the proper heading. Not necessarily in this place. Does the gentleman mean to say that the enlisted men of the Army and the Navy or the Revenue-Cutter Service should be found in the Blue Book?

Mr. MANN. Not the enlisted men of the Army and Navy, except warrant officers—certainly not, under the law—but the enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service are required to be published in the Blue Book. The enlisted men of the transport service are published in the Blue Book, and the men on all of the other vessels of the Government, outside of the Regular Army and Navy, are published in the Blue Book, except the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. There is no requirement that the thousand and odd enlisted men should have a place in the Blue Book.

Mr. MANN. If they are not employees paid out of the Treasury of the United States, then it is true; but under the law if they are employees of the Government or are paid out of the Treasury of the United States, they are required to be published in the Blue Book. Mr. Chairman, there is no escape from that proposition. I do not know whether the attempt was deliberate, or whether it was negligent, or whether it was lack of knowledge of the law. I make no charge against the officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service. I have no doubt they are as competent and capable as officers usually are. But I say when we are considering a proposition for the creation of a civil pension law which will eventually lead to pensioning every clerk in every department of the civil portion of the Government, we ought to have information in every respect, where required by the law, upon the subject.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to do more than is done either for the Army or the Navy as to the retired list. They say they want to put the Revenue-Cutter Service upon a par with the Navy, but the bill does more than that. In the Army there are two retirement lists; one is a limited retired list and the other is an unlimited retired list. On the unlimited list are officers' names who are over 64 years of age. But when an officer is retired under the age of 64 for disability the number is limited. But there is no limitation in this Revenue-Cutter bill as to retiring officers for disability. If this bill becomes a law, the Revenue-Cutter board which retires officers can make places for men below them; they can retire them ad libitum, with no control upon their number.

In the Navy there is no retirement for age except above the rank of lieutenant-commander. The attempt here is to put a caption in the Revenue-Cutter Service on a par with a lieutenant-commander in the Navy. There is no retirement for age in the Navy for a lieutenant-commander. Here is a proposition to give the Revenue-Cutter Service as to the retired list a better position than is occupied by the Army or Navy.

I wish I had time, Mr. Chairman, to call particularly the attention of the House to the increase in pay which will be caused by this bill. I call the attention of the House to one proposition which has been referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] in opposition to the bill. Now, let us understand this bill.

A lieutenant-commander in the Navy, after twenty years of service, receives $3,500 a year, and of course, as a rule, or almost invariably, they serve twenty years before they reach the point or rank of a lieutenant-commander. So under this bill a captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service would receive a salary of $3,500 a year and a lieutenant-commander in the Navy would receive $3,500 per year. In addition to the salary which is received under the bill a certain allowance is given them for commutation of quarters when not provided with quarters. That allowance is $48 per month. The Revenue-Cutter officer also receives a Navy ration per day. Here is a proposition to give the Revenue-Cutter officers at sea or on shore—and a pretty large per cent of them are always on shore—$3,500 for a captain, $48 a month in addition for commutation of quarters, and a Navy ration. Now, what will a Navy officer of a corresponding grade get? If he is on shore he receives $3,500 a year, less 15 per cent, or $2,975 a year. The Navy officer on shore will receive $2,975 a year as a lieutenant-commander, while the Revenue captain under this bill will receive $3,500 a year, besides the various allowances.

The great claim which is so strongly urged is that the Revenue-Cutter Service ought to be put upon at least terms of equality with the Navy. I wish to call attention to an actual case by way of illustration for the purpose of showing that under the pending bill Revenue-Cutter officers will be paid better than in the Navy.

According to the Navy Register issued January 1, 1903, Lieut. Commander James Hamilton Sears is on duty at the branch hydrographic office, New York City. The Register shows that he entered the naval service September 22, 1871, and was appointed lieutenant-commander March 29, 1899. Having been in the service for more than twenty years, his pay, with longevity increase, amounts to $3,500 per year, less 15 per cent because he is on land duty, or $2,975 per annum, and in addition thereto $576 for commutation of quarters, making a total of $3,551.

Now, let us make a comparison of a Revenue-Cutter officer under the same circumstances, according to the provisions of the pending bill.

According to the last Revenue-Cutter Service register, July 1, 1901, Capt. Samuel E. Maguire is on duty at New York City as superintendent of construction in the Life-Saving Service. He entered the Revenue-Cutter Service March 8, 1871, and was appointed a captain May 8, 1896. Having been in the service for more than twenty years, he would, under the bill, be entitled to a salary of $3,500 a year, and in addition thereto commutation for quarters allowed a major in the Army, amounting to $48 a month, or $576 a year, making a total of $4,076, or $525 more than Lieutenant-Commander Sears receives. And this although the bill purports to only put captains in the Revenue-Cutter Service on an equal footing with lieutenant-commanders in the Navy.

In the above illustration I have not computed Captain Maguire as being entitled to one Navy ration per day or commutation therefor, although the present statute gives him that allowance and the pending bill does not expressly repeal it.

Mr. Chairman, there is considerably more which I wish to say to the House upon this subject later, but I do not desire to further occupy the time of the House at present. I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD in order that I may insert various tables, letters, memoranda, statements, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy the floor any longer at present. I reserve the balance of my time.

The tables, letters, etc., are as follows:

REMARKS.

[A general statement of the casualty and the nature and extent of the services rendered will be here given.]

The Fraternidade was bound from Brava, Cape Verde Islands, for New Bedford with 103 persons on board. She had a favorable passage until off Montauk Point, where unfavorable winds kept them beating for seven days. The weather becoming very threatening, the captain deemed it best to try and make harbor, as he was short of provisions, water, and fuel, and the vessel was leaking. When off Black Point he tried to go about, missed stays, and got in irons, and as he was only about 1,000 yards from the rocks he let go his port anchor and 60 fathoms of chain, which parted before five minutes had elapsed. The starboard anchor was then let go and chain paid out to bitter end. This anchor dragged also, but she finally fetched up and the single anchor held her about 100 yards clear of the rocks. The heavy sea made the vessel strain and jump in such a manner that it was feared that the cable could not hold any time. Signal for assistance was set in the rigging and preparations made by the crew to save themselves when driven ashore. The sea getting larger and running heavier, the wind increasing in force, it was not deemed possible that they could survive. The Gresham was coming from Newport, bound for New London, and seeing her signals of distress went to her assistance. We anchored 100 yards ahead of the vessel in 1½ fathoms of water. The cutter was lowered and, in charge of an officer, ran a small line to the vessel. Owing to the heavy sea, she was unable to go alongside, but managed to get the line to the bark. They bent on a steel wire hawser, which proved to be too short, so our 9-inch hawser was used instead. They then began to heave up their anchor.

Owing to the heavy seas and short distance off the rocks, when they had hove into 30 fathoms it was deemed best to drag the barkentine into deeper water and farther away, so that in case anything parted we could pick her up again before she was driven ashore. When an offing had been reached, the vessel was stopped, the anchor was hove up, and she was towed safely into Newport Harbor.

The foregoing is a true statement.

J. HUTCHISON SCOTT,
Second Lieutenant.

Detailed report:

Letter of Capt. T. D. Walker, R. C. S., commanding the Gresham, to the honorable the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for information of the Department, a report on Form 2013, of assistance rendered by the Gresham to the Portuguese barkentine Fraternidade, of Brava, Cape Verde Islands, on the 13th instant, near Narragansett Pier, R. I. We were cruising from Newport to New London, when we sighted the bark anchored dangerously near to the rocks with a distress signal flying, and we at once proceeded to extricate her. As we approached a second flag (ensign) was placed in the mizzen rigging, as though to emphasize the appeal of the unfortunate people for aid.

Owing to the sea the bark was riding heavily, and the captain momentarily expected that his only remaining cable would break. In that event the bark would have been dashed onto the rocks, and there is no telling what the consequences might have been. It is reasonably certain that serious loss of life would have resulted, as the people, especially the women, seemed badly demoralized. The safety of the bark and the large number of people on board hung as it were upon a very slender thread, and I feel thankful that our good little ship happened along at the right time and was able to do the right thing. No other vessel capable of sending assistance was in sight, and this made our presence the more opportune. Crowds of summer cottagers from Narragansett Pier lined the rocks, but, under the circumstances, they were powerless to render aid. The officers and crew of the ship did their duty well.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS D. WALKER,
Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service, Commanding.

ANALYSIS OF SENATE BILL 1025, ENTITLED "A BILL TO PROMOTE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE."

The first section of the bill removes the present restriction of law upon the number of Revenue-Cutter officers and leaves the number of officers to be appointed wholly in the discretion of the President and permits him to increase them ad libitum. Section 1 also confers upon the engineer officers the rank of captain, first, second, and third lieutenant, respectively, being an entirely new provision in the service.

Section 2 confers upon Revenue-Cutter officers equal rank with certain Army and Navy officers and changes the present provision of law which directs that when Revenue-Cutter officers are serving under the Navy they shall rank next after lieutenants commanding in the Navy and provides that whenever forces of the Navy and Revenue-Cutter Service shall be serving in cooperation captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service shall rank with and next after lieutenant-commanders, thus making them rank over lieutenants commanding.

Section 3 provides that Revenue-Cutter Service officers shall receive the same pay and allowances, except forage, as are now or may hereafter be provided by law for officers of corresponding rank in the Army, including longevity pay. Under this section the pay of Revenue-Cutter Service officers is graded according to their arbitrary rank, as fixed by section 2, corresponding with rank in the Army, but not according to corresponding rank in the Navy.

Why does not the bill recite the pay?

Why should it refer to the pay of officers in the Army instead of officers in the Navy?

There are only a few classes of officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service and the only object of putting in a section of this sort is to avoid calling attention to the amount of pay and allowances to be actually obtained through it. What are the allowances? How much do they amount to?

Does this section repeal provision of the statute granting to Revenue-Cutter Service officers navy ration?

Or does it propose to give Revenue-Cutter Service officers both Navy ration and commutation for quarters?

Or Navy ration in addition to pay when on sea, and commutation for quarters as per Army officers when on shore?

How about mileage?

Officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service now are paid as follows:

Officer.	Salary.	Commutation per month.
Captains.....	$2,500	$40
First lieutenants, chief engineer.....	1,800	30
Second lieutenants, first assistant engineer.....	1,500	25
Third lieutenants, second assistant engineer.....	1,200	20

In addition, each officer gets a Navy ration. A Navy ration equals 30 cents per day.

Section 3 proposes to increase salary of third lieutenant and second assistant engineer from $1,200, as now paid, to $1,400. It also increases the pay of all Revenue-Cutter Service officers 10 per cent for each five years' service until the increase is 40 per cent.

The salaries paid in the Revenue-Cutter Service are already higher than those paid in the merchant marine or in any of the vessel service of the United States outside of the Navy. This section would pay to Revenue-Cutter Service officers a higher salary than is now received for corresponding rank in the Navy. The bill selects Army officers as the basis of fixing salary for the Revenue-Cutter Service officers because there is no reduction given in the pay of Army officers when on shore. Salaries of Navy officers are reduced 15 per cent when on shore. The bill therefore as to salaries discriminates in favor of the Revenue-Cutter Service and against the Navy and grants to the Revenue-Cutter Service higher rates of pay than are now paid even in the Navy.

Section 4 proposes a retired list in the Revenue-Cutter Service and proposes to retire all Revenue-Cutter Service officers who reach the age of 64 years. There is now no regular retired list in any of the civil branches of the Government service. Congress is being urged by every branch of the civil service to enact legislation providing for the retirement on pay of persons incapacitated through malady or age all through the civil service. At least one-tenth of the employees in the classified service of the departments in Washington are above the age of retirement fixed in this section. To a certain degree this is true of the Government service throughout the land. The question as to what disposition should be made of superannuated clerks is a pressing one.

Whatever precedent is set in one case will likely be followed in the others. The Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Service, the Marine-Hospital Service, as well as the purely clerical service of the Government are all asking for the same thing, or making requests which will be toward the same thing. If a line can not be drawn by Congress between the Navy on one side and the Revenue-Cutter Service on the other, it is idle to suppose that Congress will draw a fixed line between the military establishment and the Revenue-Cutter Service on one side and the Life-Saving Service and other branches of the civil service on the other. The only place where a fixed line can be drawn in regard to the creation of retired lists is where it now is—between the military and civil branches of the Government. If this line be crossed once, there will never be any line drawn which can not be crossed at all.

Section 5 provides for the appointment of a medical board of five commissioned officers, two from the Marine-Hospital Service and two from the Revenue-Cutter Service, to pass upon the disability of officers who appear to be incapacitated for active service prior to reaching the age of 64. This retiring board ought to consist wholly of medical officers and wholly of officers outside of the Revenue-Cutter Service. The Revenue-Cutter Service officers ought not to have the opportunity to retire each other either as a matter of favor or of enmity. The question whether an officer is incapacitated for the service, either mentally or physically, is a matter which ought to be determined by medical experts. The provision of section 5 in this respect is very objectionable.

Section 6 provides that when a retiring board finds an officer incapacitated for active service, etc., he shall be retired. The word "active" ought to be stricken out before the word "service." If the officer is capable of performing service, he might properly be designated for some of the duties of the service which do not require active sea service. The construction of this section undoubtedly would be that if the officer were incapacitated for active service in command of a revenue cutter at sea, then he must be retired, whereas such officer might be fully fit for duty as inspector in the Life-Saving Service or in the office in Washington or on construction or repair work. The whole design of these retirement sections is to retire the officers as rapidly as possible in order to make more rapid promotions in the service.

Section 7 provides that where an officer is incapacitated by reason of his own vicious habits and not due to any incident of the service, he shall be dropped from the service. The present section is quite a commentary upon the section in the bill in the last Congress, which proposed to advance such officer, upon being dropped for his own vicious habits, a considerable sum of money.

Section 8 provides that when any commissioned officer is retired, the next officer in rank shall be promoted, "according to the established rules of the service." What are the established rules of the service? Who knows?

Or is this a proposition to enact into law a rule which has been promulgated or which may be hereafter promulgated by an officer in the service? No one here can tell what the present rules are, and no one can possibly tell what the established rules of the future may be. The latter part of the section contains a provision that although the next officer in rank shall be promoted where one is retired, before this can be done he shall be subject to written examination and shall have his physical qualifications reported upon by a medical board. The section does not require that the officer shall pass the written examination or that the medical board shall find favorably as to his physical qualifications. And the wording of the section might require the promotion of the officer even though mentally incompetent and physically incapacitated. The section is loosely drawn and does not require what it was intended to require.

Section 9 proposes to pay all officers hereafter placed upon the retired list 75 per cent of the duty pay, salary, and increase of the rank upon which they may be retired.

What does duty pay, salary, and increase of the rank mean? Is there any difference between duty pay and salary; and if so, what is it?

Apparently the section is designed to give to the officers on the retired list 75 per cent of the increased pay provided for in section 3. This section also applies to officers already upon the permanent waiting-orders list. Congress passed an act in 1895, at the urgent solicitation of the Revenue-Cutter Service, providing for placing a number of officers on a permanent waiting-orders list at half pay. This was then satisfactory to the Revenue-Cutter Service and to these officers. This section would more than double the pay these officers are now receiving. When the Navy personnel bill was passed granting certain special benefits to officers who might be retired in the Navy, those special benefits were not conferred upon officers already upon the retired list. But this section proposes not only to create a retired list in the future at high pay, but to apply that high pay to officers who, on their own solicitation, have heretofore been retired at half pay.

The different chiefs of bureaus and offices report that there are no employees in their respective bureaus or offices who are permanently incapacitated, either physically or mentally, for the performance of manual labor, in whole or in part.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., April 12, 1900.

SIR: In reply to Senate resolution dated March 16, 1900, directing me to communicate to the Senate statement showing the number of persons employed in this Department as clerks, messengers, etc., together with their ages, I have the honor to submit herewith the following statement, viz:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 12, 1900.

SIR: In compliance with the requirements of a resolution of the Senate of March 16, 1900, I have the honor to report the number of employees within the several age periods specified. The total number of persons belonging to this Department (excluding the Census Office) may be stated, in round numbers, as 14,500. Of these the departmental employees in this city are, approximately, 3,500. Excluding Presidential appointees and laborers, there remain 3,255 to whom the resolution seems to apply, as follows:

Between—
14 and 19 years, inclusive.....	33
20 and 29 years, inclusive.....	303
30 and 39 years, inclusive.....	833
40 and 49 years, inclusive.....	718
50 and 59 years, inclusive.....	815
60 and 64 years, inclusive.....	301

70 and 74 years, inclusive.....	58
75 and 79 years, inclusive.....	28
Over 80 years.....	4
Total.....	3,255

From the estimates furnished by the different bureaus and offices of the Department it may be stated that something over 250 persons now on the rolls must be considered as "permanently incapacitated, either physically or mentally, for the performance of manual labor, in whole or in part." This condition in many cases results from the loss of limbs, old wounds, or health impaired in the service.

A tabular statement by offices is inclosed.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON,
Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The special claim made in behalf of a retired or pension list for the Revenue-Cutter Service is that that service is particularly dangerous. Even if we admit this to be true for the sake of argument, we must further admit that the specially dangerous service in behalf of the Government does not end with the Army, Navy, and Revenue-Cutter Service. An equally strong claim can be made in behalf of the Life-Saving Service. Indeed, there have been pending before Congress for years various propositions to create a pension list for the Life-Saving Service. The General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service has reported to Congress that between March 1, 1876, and December 31, 1887, 57 persons died by reason of injury received or disease contracted in line of duty in that service, and the records of his department show that between January 1, 1888, and December 31, 1900, 105 persons have died by reason of injury received or disease contracted in line of duty in the service.

And the following statements have been made as among the reasons for increasing the compensation to employees in the Life-Saving Service and for providing a pension list for them (see Senate Report No. 87, first session, Fifty-second Congress):

When the severe toils, bitter privations, and appalling dangers incident to their calling are considered, and when it is remembered that the spirit with which these hardships have been met has resulted in the saving of thousands of lives and an amount of property many times exceeding in value the cost of maintaining the service, while the history of their achievements has added luster to the national honor, it would seem that the higher rates would not be too great a reward to bestow on these faithful and heroic men. At all events, a substantial increase should be made.

As a consequence of their exposure many of the men have fallen victims to chronic ailments, some have been maimed for life by accidents, and others have perished on their beats. It is probably safe to say that there is no other class of men engaged in duties at once so tedious and perilous as those which these faithful guardians of the coast perform in maintaining the unrelenting night patrol throughout the rigorous season of the year. But their labors are not confined to this routine of watch patrol and daily drill. Summoned in the dead of night or by day in the midst of their ordinary toil to a duty higher than these, by an alarm that a vessel is ashore, they take their places at the boat wagon or the apparatus cart for a supreme effort, with a courage and determination that has never yet quailed before any hazard, and executed prodigies of valor and endurance that have made them celebrated throughout the land and added to the nation's glory.

The severity of this duty can hardly be conceived by people accustomed to remain at night indoors. Some idea may be framed from the fact that men have perished in its discharge, while others have providentially escaped death through timely rescue by their comrades. It is not at all unusual for the patrolmen to meet with accidents which cripple them through stumbling in the dark over driftwood and unseen obstacles, and a large proportion of the deaths which have occurred in the service is due to complaints contracted through exposure on patrol, it frequently happening during the prevalence of storms that the men are drenched by overflooding seas or by having to wade through the beach gullies, often waist deep and sometimes deeper. This duty is considered so important that it is never under any circumstances omitted, and its infraction is held to be unpardonable and is followed by certain dismissal.

In addition to the foregoing regular routine must be added their terrible and daring labors at shipwreck. This, of course, is their crowning duty, and involves efforts almost superhuman, heroism carried to the very brink of deadly peril, and often death itself.

The soldier in this age is known and is only justified as one who professionally stakes his life in defense of his fellow-citizens. It is because he does this that, grown veteran or infirm or falling on the battlefield, we recognize his right and the right of his family to support at the expense of the public he guards. These life-saving crews—these storm soldiers—render a similar service, and no less dangerous and noble, and they deserve the same substantial recognition.

In Senate Report No. 200, the present session of Congress, concerning a bill relating to compensation of district superintendents of the Life-Saving Service, there is included a letter from the General Superintendent of that service containing the following statement:

To these considerations should be added the fact that these officers, in their official routine, are exposed to hardships and dangers which do not fall to the lot of ordinary officeholders. During the active season, which embraces the most inclement portions of the year, they have to make frequent visits to the several stations in their respective districts, in most instances extending hundreds of miles along desolate and inhospitable coasts and distant from railroad facilities, often through storms and drifting snows, sometimes camping out and subsisting on rude and scanty fare, frequently making their way in small boats upon dangerous waters, and always under circumstances as widely at variance as is conceivable with the comforts and luxuries of ordinary travel. They are, moreover, frequently summoned by the keepers to trying scenes of shipwreck, where all efforts at rescue have proved fruitless and certain failure seems imminent, and on these occasions they assume command. In several such instances successful issues have resulted, when otherwise failure must have been inevitable. But their heroic struggles are not always so rewarded, nor are the hardships and perils of their calling always encountered with immunity. * * *

The assertion is ventured that no other class of officers in the whole Government is so poorly paid.

THE WEATHER BUREAU.

The Committee on Agriculture in the Fifty-sixth Congress reported favorably a bill creating a retired list or civil pension list for Weather Bureau employees, and the following were some of the reasons urged in behalf of such employees:

(1) They work three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. Their hours of duty are long. On the Pacific coast the first observation is made between 4.30 and 5.30 a. m., while on the Atlantic coast the offices can not be closed before 11 p. m., and often later. They must be on the alert at all times to detect the first premonitions of storm development and remain constantly on duty in order to distribute warnings that may be received at any moment.

(2) They are subject to great vicissitudes of climate, being required to serve, as the exigencies of the service may require, in almost any degree of latitude, from Alaska to the West Indies.

(3) By reason of the peculiar organization of the service its employees are, like officers of the Army, in a great measure deterred from obtaining a fixed habitation or enjoying the privileges that accrue to long residence in a community. Changes of station generally operate to their financial disadvantage.

THE MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The Marine-Hospital Service is probably fully as dangerous, if not more so, than the Revenue-Cutter Service. I called the attention of the House, in February, 1901, on the discussion of the revenue-cutter bill then pending, to the fact that three assistant surgeons of the Marine-Hospital Service had contracted yellow fever during the fiscal year then preceding, and to the further fact that one surgeon had died of this disease October 12, 1899, while engaged in the work of preventing its spread in Key West. In the case of a death like this in that service, there is no provision of law authorizing the payment of any sum to the family of the deceased or permitting any of those dependent upon the deceased to be placed upon the pension rolls.

But that the Marine-Hospital Service lives in expectation of eventually having all the benefits of a retired list and other special favors enjoyed by the Army and Navy is readily shown by the bill (H. R. 7189) introduced into the Fifty-seventh Congress by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to increase the efficiency and change the name of the United States Marine-Hospital Service. That bill proposes to change the name so as to designate the service as the United States health service. It proposes that the surgeon-general of the United States health service shall receive the same salary and allowances as are now allowed to be paid to the Surgeon-General of the Army.

And section 4 of the bill provides that the President may in time of war transfer the officers of this health service to the Army, as he can now transfer the Revenue-Cutter Service to the Navy.

The Revenue-Cutter Service now demands a retired list like the Navy, because the President is authorized in time of emergency to transfer revenue cutters to the Navy. If this bill for the Marine-Hospital Service or United States health service becomes a law, then that service will demand a retired list, because the President is authorized in times of emergency to use the officers of the service in connection with the Army.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE.

The General Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, in his annual report for 1901, furnishes the following statement of casualties in that service from 1875 to 1901:

Year ended June 30—	Total clerks.	Casualties.	Clerks killed.	Clerks seriously injured.	Clerks slightly injured.

1900	8,695	697	4	57	187
1901	8,978	825	7	63	229

This statement shows that during the fiscal year of 1901 7 railway mail clerks were killed, 63 seriously injured, and 229 slightly injured while on duty. This is stated to be the largest number killed and injured during any fiscal year since the service was organized, notwithstanding the fact that great improvements have been effected in railroad operations.

Superintendent White most earnestly urges legislation which will provide for the retirement of injured or superannuated clerks on pension, and he calls attention to the fact that that service has been for some time urging a pension list, just as the Revenue-Cutter Service has, in the following language:

That this office has been very persistent in its efforts to secure some legislation, in the way of a relief bill or superannuation act, to provide for our permanently disabled and worn-out clerks has been shown in the recommendations it has made in its annual reports for the last ten years.

And, referring to the bill which was introduced in Congress for the purpose of granting a pension to railway mail clerks, Superintendent White says:

In its favor is the admission of everyone who gives the nature of the occupation consideration that the service is very hazardous. The work of a postal clerk is performed under a high tension, drawing largely on his mental and physical make-up, and after years of this constant strain he is completely worn out. It seems, therefore, evident that some provision should be made for his retirement, which now involves the relinquishment of all means of support.

[From the Evening Star, January 10, 1902.]

The railway mail clerks hope for favorable action at this session of Congress upon their bill to enable them to secure retirement upon disability and other measures of relief, and in discussing the bill this morning with a Star representative, J. H. BROWELL, of Ohio, an active member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who has ably championed the cause of the clerks, said:

"I sincerely hope that Congress will give heed to the request of these faithful men, who are of invaluable service to the public, yet who, shut up in their postal cars, are seldom seen. The letter carrier is a familiar sight, but the railway-mail clerk works at his hazardous occupation with a zeal and industry which only those who have been brought into close contact with him can appreciate."

REVENUE AGENTS.

WASHINGTON, February 27, 1902.

HON. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of the 24th instant is received, asking if this office has record of the number of internal-revenue officers injured or killed in the performance of their duty during the past year, or for several years past.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that during the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1901, one internal-revenue deputy collector was killed and two wounded in the performance of official duty.

During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1900, there were no casualties. During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1899, two posse men were wounded.

During the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1898, one deputy collector and four posse men were wounded.

Posse men are not officials regularly employed in this Bureau, but they are men summoned by a deputy collector to aid him in making raids, and they are paid a fixed per diem while employed.

You further ask if there is any provision of law for the payment of compensation on account of officers who may be killed or may be so injured as to be unable to continue in the performance of their duties. In reply you are advised that this office regrets to state that no provision of law has been made for compensation in these cases. * * *

I am, respectfully, yours,

J. W. YERKES, Commissioner.

DEPUTY MARSHALS.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1902.

HON. JAMES R. MANN,

House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to your letter dated the 24th instant, you are informed that it would be very difficult (if possible) to ascertain from the records of this Department the number of deputy United States marshals who have been injured while in the performance of duty during the past year or for several years back.

There is no provision made for the payment of compensation where deputy marshals have been killed or so injured as to be unable to continue in the performance of their duties. The killing of deputy marshals in some districts is of frequent occurrence. This is especially true in the mountain districts of the South.

Respectfully,

P. C. KNOX, Attorney-General.

TWO REVENUE OFFICERS KILLED BY MOONSHINERS—BLOODY BATTLE FOUGHT IN THE MOUNTAINS OF KENTUCKY.

LEXINGTON, Ky., January 27, 1901.

The bloodiest battle in the history of the State between moonshiners and revenue officers occurred January 25 on Elkhorn Creek, on the line between Pike and Knott counties. Deputy Marshal James Hollifield and Simon Combs, of the revenue party, were killed. Rufus Wootton and Ambrose Ambury, of the posse, received flesh wounds, and Blaine Combs was captured. As none of the revenue party escaped, reports received have been meager. Elkhorn Creek is 30 miles from the nearest railroad station and in a rough mountain country. A strong force of revenue officers will be sent after the 'shiners.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ASSOCIATION,

Washington, D. C., February 28, 1902.

HON. JAMES R. MANN,

United States House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 24th instant requesting to be informed whether any bill has been introduced into the House or Senate designed to carry out the wishes of our association has been received.

I regret to state that we have been unable as yet to present our measure. The delay has been caused by a number of circumstances, chief among which has been the difficulty in obtaining accurate and reliable data from which to base the measure. We hope, however, to have a bill introduced in the near future, and we will promptly notify you of the fact and send you an advanced copy of the proposed measure.

Secretary United States Civil Service Retirement Association.

CLERKS' PENSION PROJECT—BILL BEING DRAFTED TO RETIRE AGED GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES—PROPOSED SYSTEM OF CARING FOR LIFELONG WORKERS BEING FORMULATED BY COMMITTEE IN CHARGE.

For several weeks the rooms of the executive committee of the United States Civil Service Retirement Association, in the Evans Building, 1424 New York avenue, have been the scene of great activity. This committee is composed of the president of the association, Jacob W. Starr, Vice-Presidents Pickens Neagle and Solomon E. Faunce, Secretary John E. Brooks, Treasurer Henry C. Swan, and Robert Armour, W. W. Hite, Raymond Loran, George W. Harsch, E. A. Edifford, C. H. Campbell, Joseph Stewart, David A. Caldwell, George A. Bacon, Darius A. Green, A. F. McMillan, C. E. Baldwin, and Israel W. Stone, representing all the Executive Departments and independent bureaus in this city, and is charged by the association with formulating and presenting a bill to Congress which shall have for its object the retirement of the superannuated employees not only of the civil service in Washington, but also of the force in the United States at large, such as the post-offices, custom-houses, subtreasuries, etc.

To that end its labor has been unremitting and laborious. The regular meetings of the committee are held on Saturday evening, at which much business of a routine nature is acted on and conferences are held over propositions submitted for consideration. A large amount of correspondence is had with somewhat similar organizations throughout the country—from Boston to San Francisco and from Detroit to New Orleans—and the secretary is kept busy in answering the scores of inquiries coming in from all quarters.

The labors of the committee, while pleasurable, have been somewhat onerous. As early as the second session of the last Congress it succeeded in having a resolution pass the Senate calling upon the Executive Departments for such detailed information as would enable it to formulate a bill to present to the present Congress. Information was so furnished by the Executive Departments, but owing to the difference of interpretation as to the details desired much of it could not be used. Therefore at its own expense it had some 30,000 cards printed, which, by the kindness of the heads of departments, were placed on the desk of each employee, and collected and sent to the committee rooms. The card required of each employee his or her age on birthday preceding July 1, 1901, present salary per annum, total years of Government service, exclusive of military or naval, and the name of the department where now employed.

There have been more than 20,000 of these cards received, and the committee have them nearly all assorted. This has taken much time and labor, the members often working until a late hour in the evening. In making this assortment each card has been handled from three to five times, so that when finally placed upon the assorting boards it can be tabulated with but one more handling. Quite a number of matters have developed which would be exceedingly interesting to statisticians, but the committee has concluded not to make public this tabulation, at least not until after a bill has been formulated, when a statement will be probably forwarded to the proper committees of the House and Senate, accompanied by the report of a reputable actuary, who will be employed to ascertain what can be done with the figures as given.

The committee has a lively appreciation of the fact that their friends in the service are anxious to learn what the result of its labors will be, and expectantly hoping to see a bill introduced at this session. Much encouragement has been given by such Congressmen and public officials as have knowledge of what the committee has done, and such as have visited the committee rooms have manifested a great degree of interest in its undertaking. It seems to be the universal sentiment of these two classes of officials that something must be done to relieve the civil service of superannuated employees and at the same time provide some method by which these faithful servants shall be relieved from penury and want.

VARIOUS PENSION PLANS IN PRIVATE LIFE—PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY.

All officers and employees who shall have attained the age of 70 years, or who, between the ages of 65 and 70, have become physically incapacitated, and who have been for thirty years in the service of the company, are entitled to a pension of 1 per cent of the average regular monthly pay for ten years preceding retirement for each year of service. The company sets aside an amount not to exceed $300,000 a year to meet the pension allowances, and whenever the pensions amount to more than that then they are to be scaled down to come within that sum.

CHICAGO AND NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The age of retirement, length of service, and amount of pension is the same as in the Pennsylvania Railroad scheme, but the amount set apart by the company shall not exceed $300,000 a year. And when the pensions exceed that amount a new rate is to be established to bring it within that sum.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

All officers and employees who reach the age of 70 years and have been ten years in the service of the company shall be retired on pension. Men connected with the actual operation of trains, such as engineers, firemen, brakemen, switchmen, etc., may be retired at the age of 65. Persons between 61 and 70, who have been ten years in the service and who have become incapacitated, may be retired on pension. The amount of the pension is for each year of service 1 per cent of the average monthly pay received for the ten years preceding retirement. The company makes a yearly appropriation of $100,000, and whenever the pension allowances exceed that sum they are to be ratably reduced.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF CHICAGO.

Officers and employees contribute 3 per cent of their salaries to the pension fund. Pensions are granted when the age of 60 years is reached after fifteen years' service in the bank, and employees are compelled to retire at the age of 65. Pension allowed is one-fiftieth or 2 per cent of the salary paid at the date of retirement, for each year of service, provided that in no case should it exceed thirty-five-fiftieths or 70 per cent of such salary. Other restrictions concerning the pension fund are imposed.

EUROPEAN INSURANCE COMPANIES.

In Europe it is stated that there are insurance companies which make a specialty of writing pension policies. One of the leading insurance companies in this class of business is the Wilhelma-Magdeburg, which issues policies to employees between the ages of 21 and 40 years, inclusive. The annual premiums equal 10 per cent of the yearly salary of the insured employee at the time of effecting the insurance, and, in addition, 4 per cent of each increase of salary, which is, however, only to be paid once. Pensions are paid when an employee is injured so as to be unable to work, after five years' service, or when he becomes 65 years of age. Pensions are also paid to widows and minor children up to the age of 18 years. The amount of the pension paid is equal to ten-sixtieths of the average yearly salary drawn and, in addition, one-sixtieth of such average yearly salary for each year of service above five years, but the whole pension is not to exceed forty-five sixtieths of such average yearly salary.

THE MITTEL-DEUTSCH CREDIT BANK.

Each employee pays an initiation fee of 5 per cent of his yearly salary when he enters the service and 5 per cent of each increase of his salary, and then pays as yearly dues 3 per cent of his salary up to 3,000 marks and 4 per cent in excess of 3,000 marks up to 4,000 marks. An employee who has served twenty-five years and has passed his sixty-fifth year is entitled to a pension. The amount of the pension is based upon 34 per cent of the last-drawn salary for ten years' service; 1 per cent additional for each year of the second ten-years' service and 2 per cent additional for each year of service above twenty years' service; provided that the total pension shall not exceed 2,400 marks per year. There are various other provisions and details concerning this pension scheme.

THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT.

In general, the German Government grants pension for each employee of the Government if, after a service of at least ten years, he becomes incapacitated. Or if he is injured while on duty, he is entitled to a pension even if the service is less than ten years. The rate of pension is twenty-eighthieths of the salary for ten years' service, and an additional one-eighthieth for each ensuing year of service, but shall not exceed sixty-eighthieths.

RETIRED LIST IN THE ARMY.

In the Army there are two retired lists—one the limited retired list, and the other the unlimited retired list. The limited list is limited by act of Congress to 350, and on it are placed officers who are retired prior to the age of 64 years, such as those retired for physical disability or for length of service. When officers on the limited list become 64 years of age they are transferred to the unlimited list.

The unlimited list consists of officers who are retired on account of reaching the age of 64 years.

RETIRED LIST IN THE NAVY.

In the Navy, under sections 1443, 1444, and 1445 of the Revised Statutes, officers above the grade of lieutenant, commander and below the rank of vice-admiral shall be retired on reaching the age of 62 and may be retired upon their own application after forty years' service. Under the personnel bill, approved March 3, 1899, a limited number of officers of the grades of captain, commander, and lieutenant-commander may be retired upon their own application under section 8, and under the provisions named in section 9 there may, under certain circumstances, be compulsorily retired not more than 5 captains, 4 commanders, 4 lieutenant-commanders, and 2 lieutenants in any one year.

Officers may also be retired for incapacity resulting from incidental service under act of August 3, 1861, and under certain conditions for physical disability under other acts.

In a report favoring the passage of this bill there is a statement showing the pay of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service under existing law and under the pending bill. This statement was presumably furnished by the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is misleading. It gives the pay table of officers under existing law as $374,600 and the pay table of the officers whose pay would be affected by the provisions of the pending bill under said bill at $479,960. Both of these items relate to the active list; but in order to compute the last-named amount the statement excludes consideration of the officers who would be subject to retirement upon the passage of this bill, which of course makes the longevity pay less than it would otherwise be.

This, of course, was perfectly proper as to that statement, but in connection with it is the pay table of the officers on the permanent waiting-orders list, both under existing law and under the pending bill. This gives the pay of officers on the waiting-orders list under existing law at $23,850 and under pending bill at $50,925. But the latter figure does not include the pay of any officers who would be at once retired under the pending bill. The table contains a recapitulation of the pay of active and retired officers under existing law and under the pending bill, giving the former at $398,450 and under the latter $530,820. But this computation does not include the pay of officers who would be entitled to retirement at the time of the passage of the bill, and they are not considered in the statement given either in the active service or on the retired list, so that the item in said statement showing the annual increase by pending bill at $132,370 is misleading and does not state the true facts or give the true increase.

Pay table as authorized under existing law.

LAKE MICHIGAN AND LAKE SUPERIOR

TRANSPORTATION COMPANY,

Chicago, February 7, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, the rate of wages paid by us to masters, mates, and engineers on our passenger steamers is as follows:

	Per month.
Masters	$105
Mates	85
Engineers	125

The time they are employed is about seven and one-half months, which is the extent of our season of navigation. The engineers usually put in a little longer time than masters or mates, and their time would probably extend over eight months. It depends on the work there is to do in their department. The gross tonnage of our passenger steamers is as follows: Steamer City of Traverse, 1,153 tons; steamer Peerless, 1,199 tons. There are no wages paid during the lay-up season in winter except for ship keepers. Any other information required will be pleased to furnish.

Yours, truly,

C. F. A. SPENCER, Secretary.

DEAR SIR: In reply to yours, 1st instant, below find information asked: Masters, $115; mates, $85; engineers, $114 per month, during season navigation only, which commences about March 15 and closes about December 1; average gross tonnage our four steamers, 700 tons.

Yours, truly,

THE H. W. WILLIAMS TRANSPORTATION LINE,
Per M. E. PEARMAN.

SOUTH HAVEN LINE STEAMERS, DUNKLEY COMPANY,
Chicago, February 6, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your esteemed favor of the 1st instant, relative to scale of wages which we pay to the masters, mates, and engineers on our passenger steamers, would say:

We are a new line, just having opened up the business last year, hence appointed no annual men, with one exception. However, during our short season the chief engineer drew about $1,000; the captain approximately the same. We had several changes in mates, which averaged $55 per month for first mate; second mate, $55 per month.

I understand the line men were mostly employed by the year this past season, and $1,200 for the captains and chief engineers is a very fair estimate; the mates about $800 per year.

We will be very glad to furnish you any information in our power at any time. We appreciate many of these subjects are for the good of the service.

Yours, very truly,

G. P. CORY,
General Manager.

MANITOU STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
GENERAL PASSENGER DEPARTMENT,
Chicago, February 5, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your favor of the 1st instant I have the pleasure to state that this company owns and operates the steamship Manitou, 3,000 gross tonnage. This ship is an exclusively passenger carrier, and is therefore in commission only about three months in the year, and for that reason the wages which we pay to our employees may not be a proper criterion for the purposes for which you desire the information.

Our captain receives a salary of $2,000 for the season, but we have his services for the entire year in case we require it. The same holds good as to our chief engineer, who receives a salary of $1,500. Our second engineer receives $100 per month and the third $75 per month. Our first mate receives $100 per month and the second mate $75 per month, but it must be borne in mind that the four latter officers are probably employed from four to five months during the year, as it will take the additional time over the actual running season to fit out and lay up the ship.

Trusting that this information may be of some service to you, I am,

Very truly, yours,

JOS. BEROLZHEIM,
General Passenger Agent.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry of February 3, I have the honor to say that the vessels of this Commission, with the exception of a sea-going schooner and several launches, are officered and manned by the Navy. The master of the schooner receives $1,500 per annum, the first mate $1,050, and the second mate $840. The launches are not specially provided with crews, but when used are placed in charge of other employees competent to operate them. There are several machinists appropriated for in the Commission who are competent to act as engineers of the small vessels, whose pay is $900 per annum.

Very respectfully,

GEO. M. BOWERS, Commissioner.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1902.

Hon. J. R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to your request of the 3d instant, I give below a list of the officers attached to the vessels of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. All officers on these vessels are either surveyors or under instructions as surveyors, and all take an active part in the navigation and management of the vessels; consequently the service makes no such classification as is indicated in your note, the officers being indiscriminately assigned to the deck, to boat and landing parties to meet the varying conditions, the existence of certain designations which are more purely nautical than others being simply the result of the form in which the appropriation is made.

PAY OF REVENUE-CUTTER OFFICERS ON GREAT LAKES.

The present statute fixing the pay of officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service provides for a substantial reduction of the pay while the officers are on leave of absence or while waiting orders.

The Revenue-Cutter Service calculates the Revenue-Cutter vessels on the Great Lakes as in commission eight months in the year. (See Appendix S, last Book of Estimates.)

The cutter Morrill, for instance, has 7 commissioned officers. She is stationed at Milwaukee, Wis. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, she traveled a total distance of 9,092 miles and was steaming a total of thirty-six days twelve hours and forty minutes for the entire year. During the months of January, February, and March, 1901, she did not travel a mile nor have steam up. During the months of December, 1900, and April, 1901, together, she was under steam less than a total of four days. Her seamen were discharged, her officers had nothing to do, but they continued to draw full pay.

WASHINGTON, February 25, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your two communications of the 24th instant.

In reply to one, I beg to say that I have no accurate information as to the performance of duty analogous to that executed by the Revenue-Cutter Service in this country in England, France, and Germany. I believe, however, that the duty is performed in England and France by what is known there as the "coast guards," and that the officers of the vessels of that service are taken from the reserve lists of their navies.

I will be glad to serve you further if you will make your wishes known.

Very truly, yours,

C. F. SHOEMAKER,

Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service, Chief of Division.

REVENUE SERVICE AND COAST GUARD IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

England.

In England the revenue service and coast guard are under the direct control of the Admiralty, and have been since 1856. The men are all picked men from the regular service. The coast-guard ships proper are all old battle ships and ironclads, and are officered by regular naval officers. The coast is divided into districts, and each district has a naval officer as an inspector. There are gunboats for patrolling attached to each district, and these also are officered by naval officers either on the active or retired list.

In addition to the ships there are coast-guard stations all around the coast, and the entire coast is patrolled day and night. The coast guard not only are a preventive to smuggling, but they are so closely allied to the life-saving service that the two are practically one. Lifeboats' crews always have some coast-guard men in them, and frequently are manned entirely by the coast guard.

The service being entirely under the Admiralty, the pay of officers is the same as in the Regular Navy.

France.

The French Government has no service which corresponds directly to our revenue marine. The duties which we confide to that branch of the Government service are performed partly by the customs authorities and partly by the navy.

The customs service more nearly corresponds to our revenue marine than anything else. The central administration of the customs is confided, under the ministry of finance, to a director-general, who is the sole medium of communication between the service and the minister.

The following is the strength of the force for the whole frontier:

Directors	26
Inspectors	79
Subinspectors	2
Captains	230
Lieutenants	249
Men of various ratings	19,511

The directors are divided into four classes, and receive 12,000, 10,000, 9,000, and 8,000 francs a year. They have also allowances for quarters and office expenses.

The inspectors are divided into three classes, and receive 6,000, 5,000, and 4,500 francs a year.

Subinspectors receive 3,500 and 3,000 francs a year.

Captains are divided into three classes, and receive 3,300, 2,800, and 2,400 francs a year.

Lieutenants are divided into three classes, and receive 2,300, 2,000, and 1,800 francs a year.

The other grades receive from 1,300 to 900 francs a year.

Captains and lieutenants receive an allowance for quarters of 400 and 200 francs a year, respectively.

The revenue boats are usually under the direct charge of the captains. The employment of parties afloat in boats or vessels outside of the ports is so unusual that very little provision is made for that contingency.

The duties which we are accustomed to associate with the idea of a revenue marine, namely, the repression of contraband trade, are performed by the customs authorities working on shore, while the duties actually performed by our revenue marine, namely, the policing of waters adjacent to the coast, are in France the peculiar and especial duty of the navy.

Germany.

There is no armed revenue marine in Germany. There are a number of very small vessels employed for putting customs officers on board shipping, but there is no military force acting in connection with the customs officers or treasury.

VESSELS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The register of July 1, 1901, gives the number of vessels, launches, etc., of all classes in the service as 41. Of these 1 is a receiving ship, 1 a practice ship, 1 a sloop connected with the Life-Saving Service; 14 are assigned to mere harbor or anchorage duty in various harbors; 6 are on duty in Alaskan or Arctic waters; 2 are on the Great Lakes.

The largest revenue cutter is the McCulloch, which has a gross tonnage of 869 tons. Of the 42 vessels, only 8 have a gross tonnage of more than 500 tons. Only 11 have a draft of 10 feet or more.

In the annual report of the Revenue-Cutter Service for 1897 the following vessels, still in the service, were then reported as practically worthless, to wit: McLane, Boutwell, Washington, Chandler, Forward, Winona, Galveston. These vessels are now on duty as follows: Chandler, on harbor duty at Boston; Washington, on harbor duty at Philadelphia; Boutwell, on duty at Newbern, N. C.; Forward, at Charleston, S. C.; McLane, at Key West; Winona, at Mobile; Galveston, at Galveston.

In the report of 1897 the chief of the Service stated, referring to the 27 vessels in the service in 1895, that "There are but two of these vessels (the cruisers Boutwell and Galveston) of over 400 tons burden * * * and not a single one has motive power to drive it, under the most favorable conditions of weather and sea, at top speed more than 10 or 11 knots an hour, while the average speed of the best of them will not exceed 8 or 9."

In the last annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury (p. 55) the Secretary states that "Attention is again invited to the absolute necessity for providing a number of new vessels to replace old ones of the fleet. The old, obsolete, and in other respects inefficient vessels in the Revenue-Cutter Service are a source of constant anxiety, not only because they are not adapted to the work of the Service and can not be depended upon in emergencies," etc. "These vessels are anything rather than efficient revenue cutters; they are discreditable to the Department, and furnish subject for criticism. Of this class are the following:"

The Woodbury (now at Portland Me.); the McLane (now at Key West); the Hamilton (now at Savannah, Ga.); the Boutwell (now at Newbern, N. C.). "It is plain that further expenditures on these old vessels should not be continued longer than it will take to provide new ones to supply their places. It is therefore recommended that new vessels be constructed to replace those above named at a cost for each of $175,000. This will require an appropriation of $700,000."

There is no vessel in the Revenue-Cutter Service of 1,000 tons burden.

The Light-House Board has 36 steam tenders, 11 steam launches, and 2 sailing tenders.

The new steam tenders of the Light-House Board cost over $100,000 each, and a new one has been authorized for the Pacific coast to cost $120,000 (Thirteenth district).

In the Second light-house district (Boston) there are 4 steam tenders including the Mayflower, a steel screw steamer of 572 tons' gross burden built in 1897.

Under the Hepburn bill, on July 1, 1902, seven captains would be retired on account of age. On the 1st day of July, 1907, there would have been retired 31 captains on account of age by reason of retirement for age only. There would be promoted several persons as captain by July 1, 1907, who had been commissioned in the service at that time less than twenty years and one of whom would be only 40 years of age.

Through retirement only there would be promoted by July 1, 1907, to first lieutenant several persons of the age of only 32 years and one of whom would have been commissioned in the service only nine years.

By retirement only on July 1, 1902, there would be promoted to first lieutenant several persons who would then be commissioned in the service only eleven years.

As illustrating the age and length of service of the engineers, I submit one of the present chief engineers is only 37 years of age May 3, 1902, and only entered the service February 18, 1888. Not any of the first assistant engineers entered the service prior to May 12, 1888, and three only entered the service in July, 1895.

Of the second assistant engineers, not any entered the service prior to July 13, 1895, and several entered the service in February, 1901.

There is to-day 1 retired officer, Captain Hodgson, who commanded the McCulloch at the battle of Manila Bay.

On the permanent waiting-orders list there are 4 captains, 4 first lieutenants, 1 second lieutenant, 1 third lieutenant, 9 chief engineers, 6 first assistant engineers, 3 second assistant engineers. These were all placed on the permanent waiting-orders list in 1895, shortly following the passage of the act approved March 2, 1895, authorizing such action.

BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1901.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your personal request of yesterday for the number of claims filed on account of disability and death resulting from service on the revenue cutters during the war with Spain, you are furnished the following statement:

Claims for invalid pension by enlisted men	8
Claims for invalid pension by commissioned officers	0
Claims on account of death of enlisted men	2
Claims on account of death of commissioned officers	3
Total	13

None of the claims for invalid pension has been allowed. One has been rejected for the reason that the disability existed prior to enlistment. The others are in process of adjudication.

The two claims on account of death of enlisted men are pending, awaiting the claimants' response to calls for evidence. One of the claims on account of death of a commissioned officer, of a dependent mother, was rejected—the officer having left a child who had prior right and who was pensioned; but pension was subsequently allowed the mother by special act of Congress. The other two were allowed under the general law.

Very respectfully,

H. CLAY EVANS, Commissioner.

BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1902.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 24th ultimo, in which you request that the information furnished you February 1, 1901, in regard to claims filed on account of disability and death resulting from service on the revenue cutters during the war with Spain, be brought to date, you are advised that no claims of this class have been filed since the former report was made to you. The following statement shows the present condition of the claims on file at that time:

Claims for invalid pension:

Widows and dependents:

MEMORANDUM SHOWING THAT THE WORK OF THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE HAS NOT INCREASED IN RECENT YEARS.

For fiscal year 1873 this service boarded 30,543 vessels.
For fiscal year 1878 this service boarded 31,066 vessels.
For fiscal year 1879 this service boarded 32,853 vessels.
For fiscal year 1880 this service boarded 36,318 vessels.
For fiscal year 1889 this service boarded 18,069 vessels.
For fiscal year 1900 this service boarded 20,089 vessels.
For fiscal year 1901 this service boarded 22,563 vessels.

VESSELS IN DISTRESS ASSISTED.

In the report submitted by Mr. SHERMAN for the committee favoring this bill it is stated that during the fiscal year of 1901 the number of "vessels in distress assisted" by the Revenue-Cutter Service was 107, and that the "value of vessels assisted and their cargoes" was $5,197,825, and that the number of "persons on board vessels assisted" was 1,581.

Great stress is laid in the committee report upon this showing, and the plain intention is to give the impression that the vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service, through its arduous and gallant actions, saved from destruction a large number of lives and a large amount of property. The intimation is that the "vessels in distress" were in danger of shipwreck in time of storm, or something of that sort, and that through the bravery of the Revenue-Cutter officers these "vessels in distress" were rescued.

Herewith is submitted statements taken from the records of the Revenue-Cutter Service office in all cases of assistance rendered to "vessels in distress" during the fiscal year of 1901 where the value of the vessel and cargo together equaled $75,000. The cases set forth cover the amount of $4,441,345 out of the total of $5,197,825 which the Revenue-Cutter Service claims to have assisted during the year.

An examination of these reports shows that in no case was any danger incurred by the Revenue-Cutter Service officers or vessels; that in no case was assistance rendered in time of storm or danger, and in no case was any very substantial assistance rendered at all. One instance of assistance rendered to a boat of the Navy is also given as an example:

Statement showing all cases where assistance to "vessels in distress" was rendered by revenue cutters during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, wherein the value of the vessel assisted, together with its cargo, amounted to the sum of $75,000.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 15, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 13th instant, asking to be furnished with the data on which the summary of the work performed by vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service during the past fiscal year, as it appears in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, was based, I have respectfully to state that the records from which it was compiled are voluminous and cannot be conveniently copied. In accordance with your suggestion an opportunity will be afforded you at any time to make a personal examination of said data.

Respectfully,

O. L. SPAULDING,
Assistant Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 7, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Agreeably to your letter of the 5th instant, I inclose copies of the statements therein requested, which are given in the order in which they occur in your letter.

The estimated value of the cargo ($2,500,000) of the steamer Leon was inadvertently omitted in making up the tabular statement for the annual report. It has, however, been included in the statements prepared since the report was submitted, as it is in the one inclosed.

Assistance rendered to Government vessels is not usually included in our tabular statements. The launch of the U. S. S. Michigan, however, was included because her position was regarded as one of peril.

Respectfully,

C. F. SHOEMAKER,
Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service, Chief of Division.

Detailed report: The vessel being anchored off the foot of Bates street, Detroit, Mich., about 9:30 p. m., on July 4, 1900, was hailed by the steam launch of the U. S. S. Michigan, requesting assistance, as she was drifting downstream into the path of the ferry and excursion boats, with her engine disabled. Sent the dingy to her assistance and towed her upstream to the Michigan, which was anchored above us.

Vessel assisting, McCulloch.
Vessel assisted, steamer Nome City, 1,660 tons.
Date, July 11, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 60.
Value of vessel, $150,000.
Nature of casualty, lost three blades of her propeller.
Location, 255 miles W. & N. of Cape Flattery.
State of weather, clear and pleasant.
Direction and force of wind, light west breeze.
State of tide and sea, smooth sea, gentle southerly swell.

Detailed report: July 11, 1900, at 4.15 p. m., en route Dutch Harbor to Seattle, 270 W. & N. of Cape Flattery, sighted the steam schooner Nome City standing across bow of this vessel making little headway, although under steam and sail with a fair wind. At 6.15 p. m., when she was abreast, a signal was hoisted which we could not read. Standing toward the Nome City, her master stated he had lost three blades of his propeller July 4; was bound for Portland, Oreg., and asked to be towed to Astoria. The commanding officer of the McCulloch offered to tow him to Port Townsend; steam was ordered on all boilers in order to get in with the disabled vessel before bad weather set in. The Nome City sent an 8-inch hawser by one of her boats, and at 7.10 p. m. took her in tow. At 8 a. m., July 13, cast her off at Port Townsend, having towed her 340 miles in thirty-seven hours.

Vessel assisting, Rush.
Vessel assisted, ship Jabez Howes, 1,648 tons.
Date, July 17, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 17.
Value of vessel with cargo, $105,000.
Nature of casualty, coal given out.
Location, Dutch Harbor, Alaska.

Detailed report: At the request of the master of the ship Jabez Howes and the agent of the North American Commercial Company, steamed alongside that ship and towed her alongside wharf to discharge her cargo. The coal had given out at the company's station, and this was the only coal in Dutch Harbor, and there were no other means at hand to put her alongside wharf.

Vessel assisting, Gresham.
Vessel assisted, barkentine White Wings.
Date, August 19, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 8.
Value of vessel, with cargo, $73,000.
Nature of casualty: Sea smooth; in trying to sail from anchorage carried down by tide.

Location: Off Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y.
Detailed report: At 6.30 a. m., observing that the barkentine White Wings in sailing from anchorage toward channel was carried across the bow of the ship Claverdon, we got under way and proceeded to her assistance. The tug Unity of New York arriving and making a bargain, ran her hawsers and tried to pull her clear. Being unable to do so owing to the strong tide, she requested our assistance. We gave her our 11-inch hawser and held the Unity in position and also helped her tow. The tug had the White Wings on a bridle, and just as she was going clear the forward leg of bridle parted, the White Wings slewed, her mizzenmast fetched up against the bowsprit of the Claverdon, and threatened to carry it away at the deck. Some running gear was parted, also the forward swifter and one stay. The next attempt she came clear and proceeded to sea.

Vessel assisting, Rush.
Vessel assisted, bark Rufus E. Wood, 1,477 tons.
Date, August 21, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 17.
Value of vessel with cargo, $98,000.
Nature of casualty, mutiny.
Location, Unalaska, Alaska.

Detailed report: Sent two officers and three armed men to arrest a mutinous sailor who had threatened the master and who had deserted from the Rufus E. Wood. Apprehended him, placed him in irons, and delivered him to the master of the Wood.

Vessel assisting, Bear.
Vessel assisted, Robert Dollar, 1,389 tons.
Date, October 2, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 88.
Value of vessel with cargo, $95,000.
Nature of casualty, run aground.
Location, off Nome, Alaska.
State of weather, overcast and drizzling rain.
Direction and force of wind, ESE. to to NE.; force, 3 to 5.
State of tide and sea, flood tide, choppy sea.

Detailed report: At 8 a. m., October 2, a steam launch came alongside and reported American steamer Robert Dollar, of San Francisco, aground and that the master requested assistance. The Bear was immediately got under way and anchored as near the Dollar as safety permitted. The Robert Dollar, having a steam launch, ran a hawser, binding three hawsers together to reach the Bear, the latter at the time being anchored in 4 fathoms of water. At 10.15 got under way and steamed ahead at full speed; started the Dollar, but carried away tow line. Stood back for anchorage and ran line to Dollar. At 1.30 made second attempt to haul vessel off, when line again parted. Dollar sent line and, using Bear as an anchor, hove herself off, floating at 7.45 p. m. During the day the wind increased from gentle easterly to fresh north-easterly breezes, and sea was making rapidly when the Dollar was floated.

Vessel assisting, Onondaga.
Vessel assisted, ship I. F. Chapin, 2,013 tons.
Date, December 15, 16, and 17, 1900.
Number of persons on board, 28.
Value of vessel with cargo, $155,000.
Nature of casualty, ashore.
Location, off North Jetty, Christiana Creek, Wilmington, Del.
State of weather, clear and cold.
Direction and force of wind, NE. 2.
State of tide and sea, smooth sea, half flood.

Detailed report: At 5 p. m. December 15 came up with ship I. F. Chapin aground inside black buoy at southerly entrance to Cherry Island Channel off North Jetty; Christiana Creek, Wilmington, Del., she having grounded in attempting to pass out of the channel in tow of tugs O. L. Hallenbeck and Juno. The ocean tug Navigator had parted 9-inch hawser the day before in attempting to haul her afloat and had given up the attempt. 5.15 anchored ahead of ship; 6.30, at request of master, took hold of his 9-inch line. Started vessel, but line parted.

Tide having fallen, gave up attempt for that tide and anchored for the night. At 6.30 a. m. of the 16th took hold of Chapin's 11-inch line. By 9 had hauled him onto ranges, but tide having fallen, anchored to wait next tide. No work done, at request of master of ship, that evening tide. At 7 a. m. of 17th took hold of 11-inch line, hauled him off west bank, but he grounded on east bank; 8 had to let go hawser to straighten our vessel down river, and in attempting to bring it again tug Juno fouled it in her wheel. Tide was lost for that morning. 9.30 anchored. At 9.15, after master had sent word that no attempt to float the vessel would be made on that night tide, the Chapin floated off by the efforts of her two tugs alone and without further assistance from this vessel.

Vessel assisting, Windom.
Vessel assisted, steamship Inch Keith, 2,419 tons.
Date, January 13, 1901.
Number of persons on board, 39.
Value of vessel with cargo, $32,000.
Nature of casualty, ashore.
Location, Holland Point, Md.
State of weather, clear.
Direction and force of wind, NW; force, 3.
State of tide and sea, three-quarter flood, sea smooth.

Detailed report: At 9.55 sighted a steamer ashore off Holland Point, Md.; stood for her; 10.30, stopped and boarded her, and found her to be the British steamer Inch Keith, of Liverpool; had gotten ashore at 7 p. m., 9th instant, and was lightering cargo. Tug Sandow ran our line to steamer and held us up and assisted while pulling on her; 11.40, steamer floated, apparently without damage. Both master and agents expressed greatest appreciation of services rendered.

Vessel assisting, Gresham.
Vessel assisted, ship Astral, 2,995 tons.
Date, February 6, 7, 8, and 9, 1901.
Number of persons on board, 32.
Value of vessels with cargo, $235,000.
Nature of casualty, mutiny.
Location, off Sandy Hook light-ship.

Detailed report: On the 6th instant, while standing down through the Swash Channel to sea on a cruise, sighted Standard Oil Company's ship Astral at anchor, 2 miles N. by E. of Sandy Hook light-ship, both anchors down, sails roughly furled, and yards cockbilled. Stood for her and at 3.10 hailed the master and ascertained that his crew had refused to work. A 50-mile gale blowing, with high-running sea, and the crew not violent, it was deemed not safe to lower a boat, and boarding her was therefore postponed until the gale abated.

At 6 the following morning weighed anchor and stood out for the Astral. At 8.15 anchored off her starboard quarter. Although the wind was still blowing strong from the northwest and a high sea running, the whaleboat with an armed crew was lowered and sent to the Astral, and after a hard pull to windward reached the ship. The mutinous crew was mustered and the law relating to mutiny read to them. After consulting among themselves they were again mustered and each man was asked what he decided to do.

Eleven of the number returned to duty, two desired medical attention, and nine refused to go in the ship. Three ringleaders were put in single irons and brought aboard the cutter upon the request of the master, where they were held until the civil authorities could take measures for their incarceration.

On the 8th instant the place made vacant by the removal of the three ringleaders was filled by new men and as the remaining men who had held out on the 7th instant turned to, the ship with her proper complement was able to sail on her voyage. For the suppression of this mutiny the master of the ship and the representative of the Standard Oil Company were very grateful and expressed their appreciation of the assistance rendered by the Gresham. On the 9th instant at 3.30 p. m. two deputy United States marshals came on board the Gresham with a warrant for the arrest of the three men, and they were thereupon surrendered and taken to jail.

Vessel assisting, McLane.
Vessel assisted, steamer Margaret, 674 tons.
Date, March 14, 1901.
Number of persons on board, 17.
Value of vessel with cargo, $85,800.
Nature of casualty, run aground owing to dense fog.
Location, Point Pinelos, Tampa Bay, Florida.

State of weather, overcast and raining.
Direction and force of wind, calm.
State of tide and sea, flood, smooth.

Detailed report: The steamer Margaret left Port Tampa, Fla., on the morning of March 13, 1901, with 150 excursionists, bound for Egmont Key, Florida. About 9 p. m., in a dense fog, the Margaret ran aground in an almost inaccessible place on Point Pinelos. On learning of accident, McLane got under way and steamed from St. Petersburg to within a mile of the Margaret. All passengers had been transferred from the Margaret to Caloosa, which ran aground while trying to assist. The tug Catherine could not reach her because of shoal water, and the Margaret would have been uncomfortably situated had it not been for the McLane. The latter sent out a boat to sound ahead, and by extremely careful work got within 200 yards of the Margaret and sent a 4-inch line on board. This line proved inadequate, and a 6-inch line was substituted. It was very difficult to maneuver on account of shoal water all around, but the McLane succeeded in floating the Margaret after three hours' work.

Vessel assisting, Golden Gate.

Vessel assisted, British ship Cardiganshire, 1,400 tons.

Date, June 4, 1901.

Number of persons on board, 23.

Value of vessel with cargo, $90,545.

Nature of casualty, loss of anchor, etc., so that she was drifting helplessly on an island.

Location, San Francisco Harbor, California.

Detailed report: The British ship Cardiganshire coming into harbor under sail with licensed pilot aboard was taking in sail preparatory to rounding to, when the starboard anchor was let go, the chain snapped, and the port chain got fouled so as to be useless.

Ship was rapidly drifting on weather side of Alcatraz Island, a strong flood tide of about 6 knots running, and a fresh breeze from southwest. Seeing her helpless condition, Golden Gate steamed out to her, ran under her bow and got a line to her. She was not 50 feet from the rocks when the Golden Gate started ahead, and, with a strong flood tide, it looked as if she must go ashore, but in a few minutes she was started ahead, and after she was clear of the rocks about half a mile out our line carried away. Came alongside and made fast to her starboard quarter; brought her to anchor, the people on board having succeeded in clearing the port chain. The quarantine boat Sternberg was alongside, but was unable to do anything with her, owing to her lack of power, and both vessels were drifting on the rocks when the Golden Gate took hold of her. If the latter vessel had not taken hold of her so promptly there is no doubt she would have gone on the rocks, stove a hole in her, and probably lost the ship.

Detailed statements of the casualty and the nature and extent of service rendered by vessels of the Revenue-Cutter Service in the following instances:

Vessel assisting, Nunivak.

Vessel assisted, steamer Leon, 632 tons.

Date, June 22, 1901.

Number of persons on board, 205.

Value of vessel, with cargo, $2,600,000.

Nature of casualty, out of provisions.

Location, mouth of Yukon River, Alaska.

Detailed report: Arriving at Aphoon, mouth of Yukon River, June 22, 1901, found steamer Leon short of provisions for passengers and crew, she having been detained here a week by ice and her supplies exhausted. No prospect of ice clearing up for several days. None of the other vessels could assist her, as they, too, were running short, and no supplies within reach on the river. Loaned her from ship's rations 800 pounds flour, 50 pounds coffee, 72 pounds butter, to be replaced in kind at St. Michael.

Vessel assisting, Nunivak.

Vessel assisted, steamer Louise.

Date, June 25, 1901.

Number of persons on board, 48.

Value of vessel, $75,000.

Nature of casualty, delay on account of ice.

Location, Aphoon, mouth Yukon River, Alaska.

Detailed report: On June 25, 1901, while waiting for ice to clear at Aphoon, mouth Yukon River, Alaska, master of steamer Louise came on board and stated that his supplies were almost exhausted by the long delay. None being obtainable elsewhere, loaned him from ship's rations 200 pounds flour, to be replaced in St. Michael, this being all that the cutter could then safely spare.

Vessel assisting, Algonquin.

Vessel assisted, British steamer Starcross, 1,822 tons.

Date, June 29 and 30, 1901.

Number of persons on board, 24.

Estimated value of vessel with cargo, $400,000.

Nature of casualty, run aground.

Location, Cape Lookout, North Carolina.

Detailed report: At 10.45 p. m., June 28, Algonquin at anchor off Southport. Information brought alongside by tug that a steamer was ashore on Lookout Shoal. At 11.45 officers and crew on liberty having been recalled, ship was under way and steaming out of harbor under three boilers and fires started under fourth. All possible speed made. At 9 a. m., 29th, arrived on scene, but as steamer was ashore well up on shoal great care had to be used in approaching her and the way sounded in.

It was 10 a. m. before we were close enough to send an officer in a boat to sound out around her and board her. Found she was the British steamship Starcross, of Cardiff, Milburn, master, from Brunswick, Ga., for Bremen via Newport News, with heavy laden cargo of cotton, phosphate, and lumber. She had taken ground on outer shoal at 5 p. m., 27th, weather being clear and bright, daylight, sea smooth. Soundings taken by us showed she was drawing 22 feet 2 inches and was ashore on 20-foot lump. The boarding officer's questions could not develop any reason for her going ashore. Light-house in plain sight, sea smooth, soundings increase gradually to southward of shoal. It seemed a miracle that she had been two days on shoal and no sea had rolled in and no wind had developed.

Before our arrival the master had floated her (so he said) with his engine, but through ignorance of locality, had again grounded at top of high water. Low water when we arrived, so nothing could be done in way of pulling. Thorough examination of soundings made, however, and vicinity well sounded out. 11.30 a. m. tugs Blanche and Marion, of Wilmington, N. C., arrived, and entered into some agreement with master for floating steamer. Westwood by ready to take hold. We had offered our services on arrival, but master wished first to talk with tugs regarding matter. After making a thorough examination of her situation the tug captains approached us with a proposition that as she was too big for them to think of handling alone, we should take the steamer's line and pull on the high water and one of them would endeavor to hold her head up to the wind while the other pulled also.

Accordingly, at 3 p. m. we got our anchor and steamed up alongside and took her line. After pulling until 6 p. m. and parting her line twice without starting the vessel, we discontinued operations for that tide, it having fallen too much for further work. During night consultations were held with tug captains and it was decided very sensibly that we should do all the pulling and both tugs endeavor to hold her head up. On morning of 30th we again went to steamer and worked on the high water from 4 a. m. until 7 a. m., but unavailingly. Succeeded in turning her on her heel, but not floating her. We then lay off and anchored to wait for afternoon tide, which was the fuller tide.

During the morning watch the wrecking tug Wm. Coley, of New York, arrived on the scene. At this time we had swung steamer around several points, so that she headed east, but she still remained fast aft. Coley planted a big wrecking anchor off starboard bow and hove the cable taut on bow of steamer, then made fast alongside of her just before high water. We ran out our 9-inch hawser to steamer's bow, she having no line strong enough to stand the strain, and with two tugs to hold her head up to wind, and with Coley working alongside stranded steamer, we finally floated her at 6 p. m.

The tugs were small and of little power and experienced difficulty in even holding her head to windward. Twice our line was let go from steamer after we had started her, and when at last we did give her the final pull, which started her, we not only brought the steamer, but the three tugs as well, and also the big anchor planted by the wrecker. After we had floated her she let go our line and we hauled it in on board at once, so as to give the tugs a better opportunity to handle her. After seeing her engines started and ascertaining by a boarding officer, sent for the purpose, that she was uninjured, as far as could be told at the time by her not leaking and everything working smoothly, we saw her started for Newport News under her own steam, and then headed back for Wilmington to renew our coal supply.

It was conceded by the tug captains and also by the steamer's master that they never could have floated her alone, and when one compares our 2,600 horsepower with their combined 400, the concession seems at least tenable. As a matter of fact, the next day a bad swell was rolling in from the south-east, and the steamer would not have lasted long if she had been there.

Respectfully submitted.

O. S. WILLEY.

Captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, Commanding.

The claim of the Revenue-Cutter Service, as has been set forth in various reports concerning the pending bill or similar bills, is that it is the ocean police, and that its vessels are constantly cruising on the lookout for disasters to other vessels. What the Revenue-Cutter vessels actually do in the way of rendering assistance is shown by the preceding statements. What the Revenue-Cutter Service does not do in the way of rendering assistance is shown by the following statement of facts taken from the report of the Life-Saving Service for the last fiscal year:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, as shown by the annual report of the Life-Saving Service, there were on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts and on the Great Lakes 937 casualties to vessels.

On the Atlantic and Gulf coasts there were 162 disasters resulting in total loss to vessels and 329 disasters resulting in partial damage to vessels. On the same coasts 51 vessels foundered, 182 vessels stranded, 213 vessels collided, 35 vessels were on fire. Other vessels suffered from other disasters.

On the Pacific coast there were 51 disasters resulting in total loss to vessels and 48 disasters resulting in partial loss to vessels. Of these, 4 foundered, 63 stranded, 20 collided, 9 were on fire.

On the Great Lakes there were 44 disasters resulting in total loss to vessels and 212 disasters resulting in partial loss to vessels. Of these, 19 foundered, 80 stranded, 99 collided, 32 were on fire.

Of the above vessels, 12 foundered with loss of life, 15 stranded with loss of life, and 9 collided with loss of life.

Where were the revenue cutters when these disasters were happening?

The report of the committee in favor of the pending bill quotes a statement which is said to have been made by Admiral Melville before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In this report Admiral Melville is credited with using the following language relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service:

I have watched these vessels leave port upon the approach of a gale to patrol the coast in the hope of rendering assistance to any ships that might have been unfortunate enough to have been cast on the beach. * * *

The work of the revenue marine is a more dangerous occupation than that of the Navy, because the duty of the first organization is to police the coast, while the Navy really polices the ocean. It is seldom that a ship is now lost at sea. It is cruising along the coast that is dangerous, and this is the special province of the revenue marine.

This is the strongest claim put forward in behalf of the Revenue-Cutter Service. It is a claim that has been persistently made. Admiral Melville has not been in a position where he could possibly have personal knowledge of the facts stated by him. He has been imposed upon by some one. The statements submitted above of actual cases of assistance rendered to "vessels in distress," as claimed by the Revenue-Cutter Service, will show whether they were rendered during or following a gale. But the intimation in the statement by Admiral Melville, as well as in the persistent claim of this service, is that its vessels are constantly cruising in time of storm as well as in quiet along the coast for the purpose of aiding any vessels in distress. The intimation is made that the Revenue-Cutter vessels are out at sea cruising along the coast nearly all of the time. According to Admiral Melville, that is their chief occupation.

But in the Revenue-Cutter Office are monthly statements from each Revenue-Cutter vessel showing the time during the month such vessel has been at anchor and the time under way, both expressed in days, hours, and minutes. Such statements also show the number of miles traveled or cruised each month.

Herewith submitted are compiled statements as to about half the vessels in the Revenue-Cutter Service; also a statement showing the number of miles cruised by each vessel in the service during the last fiscal year, and the location of each vessel:

NO PUNISHMENT FOR DESEDITION.

In a letter from Secretary Gage to Senator FRYE, chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, dated February 26, 1898, relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service, Secretary Gage said:

There is now no authority for the apprehension of deserters from the Revenue-Cutter Service; no mode or method by which the crime of mutiny or desertion can be punished. Under existing conditions a man may sign articles of enlistment one day and desert the Service the next and defy arrest for his crime, a condition unknown to any other organized service under Government or even the merchant marine.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, March 28, 1902.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Agreeably to the request contained in your note of the 26th instant, I inclose copies of the detailed reports of the operations of the revenue steamer Galveston during and subsequent to the hurricane which swept over the city of that name September 8, 1900.

You will observe that only 38 persons are referred in the detailed reports as having been rescued. The abstract journal of the vessel, however, which is a consolidated monthly report of the operations of the vessel for the month, shows 40 lives to have been saved.

Respectfully,

C. F. SHOEMAKER.

Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service, Chief of Division.

U. S. S. GALVESTON, Galveston, Tex., September 11, 1900.

C. T. BRIAN,

First Lieutenant, R. C. S., Commanding U. S. S. Galveston.

SIR: I have the honor to respectfully report that, at 12 o'clock on the 9th instant, on receiving the information that there were still people in the western part of the city who had not been rescued, and after obtaining your permission to take the cutter and go to their assistance, I took a boat's crew from the ship, composed of the following men: Charles Lincoln, boatswain; T. Olsen, coxswain; U. Idstrom, third oiler; C. Wichelhaus, seaman; H. Gosch, ordinary seaman; W. Miether, bugler, and one man from shore who went with us to show us the way. I would state that every man in the crew performed his duty in every way highly satisfactory.

I rowed up the bay about 4 miles and then started across the flooded portion of the city, and after dragging the boat over the shoal places I at last succeeded in reaching a freight car, where two women and two children had taken refuge. I took them into the boat, and after rowing and dragging the boat about, and finding no more people in trouble, I started back to the ship. On the way I picked up three dead bodies and towed them in and reported them to the proper authorities. I brought the people aboard ship and gave them food and shelter. One of the women being injured, I made a stretcher for her and carried her to the hospital with the help of the crew.

I would also state that on the morning of the 10th instant, at your direction, I took cutter and a crew from the ship and picked up eight dead bodies and towed them in to the wharf.

I would also inform you that I have issued 300 rations to the people we have taken care of, and would request you to ask the Department to authorize the purchasing of 300 extra rations from the contractor, to replenish those issued.

Respectfully submitted.

F. W. SMITH,

Third Lieutenant, Revenue-Cutter Service, Acting Executive Officer.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. T. BRIAN,

First Lieutenant, Revenue-Cutter Service, Commanding.

U. S. S. GALVESTON, Galveston, Tex., September, 1900.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,

Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have to report that on the 8th instant a hurricane of great violence visited this place, doing untold damage, great loss of life, and causing great distress.

At 4 the water commenced to rise over the wharves so rapidly that it was impossible for the people to leave the house on the bay shore. Sent the cutter and crew in charge of Second Asst. Engineer C. S. Root (as it was impossible to spare Lieutenant Smith, as it took our attention to look out for the vessel) to render what assistance he could. He brought three families on board, and moved the rest to places of safety.

The boat returned at 1 a. m. September 9. Lieutenant Smith volunteered to take boat and rescue 2 women and 2 children in a box car up the bay. The boat returned with rescue party. We fed and gave shelter to 4 families, and issued 300 rations and water to those that asked for assistance, as it was impossible to buy any provisions as nearly 70 per cent of the residences were washed and blown down. The waterworks were damaged. The cistern water was ruined by salt water. In consequence fresh water is very scarce. Up to date the city authorities estimate the deaths nearly 5,000. We had no casualties on board. The crew behaved and worked splendidly, and responded promptly to every call.

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. T. BRIAN,

First Lieutenant, Revenue-Cutter Service, Commanding.

U. S. S. GALVESTON, Galveston, Tex., September 11, 1900.

First Lieut. CHARLES T. BRIAN, R. C. S.,
Commanding U. S. S. Galveston.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following report of the part taken by eight men from this vessel in rescuing some of the inhabitants of this city from drowning during the hurricane that was raging here on the afternoon and evening of the 8th instant:

I left the ship with your permission at 4 p. m. in charge of the cutter, manned by the following volunteer crew: G. Jeffas, gunner; J. Anderson, carpenter; N. Cormack, master at arms; T. Olsen, coxswain; W. Gardiner, oiler (third class); W. Idstrom, oiler (third class); B. Rafailovich, fireman; J. Bierman, ordinary seaman.

I dragged the boat from the ship across the railway tracks and launched her on Fourteenth street. Being informed that there were women and children to the east of Fourteenth street in danger of drowning, I turned to the east on avenue A and succeeded in embarking 13 persons from two houses on that street between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets. These houses were afterwards destroyed by the wind and sea. The boat being loaded as deep as I deemed advisable under the circumstances, I returned to the ship and placed these people aboard, arriving alongside at 4.50 p. m.

I left at 5 p. m. to render further assistance. On arriving at the corner of Fourteenth street and Avenue A, I found a current had commenced running from east to west with a speed of from 5 to 6 knots per hour, and this current, together with the high wind, made the boat almost unmanageable, pulling 6 oars.

I endeavored to pull to the eastward, but was unable to make headway. All hands jumped overboard and tried to tow the boat to windward by means of the painter, but finding the water up to our necks, and being unable to make way against the current, the oars were again manned, and I gradually drifted to the westward along avenue A. At a point midway between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, I picked up four women and two men from a skiff which had foundered about 300 feet to the eastward and were being rapidly swept into the bay.

About this time, the roof of the grain elevator at the foot of Fourteenth street blew off, and the boat narrowly escaped being crushed by flying debris. At the corner of Fifteenth street and avenue A, I caught a turn with boat's painter around a telegraph pole, thus preventing the boat from being driven farther to the westward. By this time the wind had so increased that oars were of no use and no further attempt was made to use them. By running lines the boat was warped to a small frame house between avenues A and B on Fifteenth street, and I took aboard four aged people (two women and two men). I then warped the boat to the corner of avenue B and Fifteenth street, dropped down to the westward along avenue B as far as Seventeenth street, but saw no one who needed assistance.

I then warped the boat to a brick building on the northeast corner of Avenue C and Seventeenth street and landed the passengers, this being the safest place I was able to reach. The lower floor of this two-story building was occupied by a grocer, and was crowded by refugees. I was there informed that there were several people in great danger on Avenue C between Fifteenth and Seventeenth streets. I took possession of a coil of 60 fathoms of 1½-inch sisal rope (which was part of the grocer's stock) to assist in working the boat to the eastward and gave a receipt of the same. Avenue C at this time was full of floating debris and swimming cattle. The wind was blowing so hard it was impossible to look to windward.

Ordinary Seaman J. Bierman took the end of the new coil of line in his teeth, swam as far to the eastward as he could draw the line, and made it fast to a telegraph pole which was about midway between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets on Avenue C. Making fast to the pole I attempted to run a line farther to the eastward, but the wind, current, and wreckage prevented, so was reluctantly compelled to give it up. I took aboard the occupants of three frame houses at this point (11 persons in all). It was now so dark that it was impossible to see, and I was compelled to desist from the work of rescue.

The boat being full, I dropped back to the before-mentioned brick store and landed our passengers. It being impossible to return to the ship, and not knowing how long we should have to remain in the boat, I took possession of a box of soda biscuit. There being no fresh water to be had, and as all the men were thirsty, I took a large bottle of pickles, thinking the vinegar would help to quench their thirst.

The crew of the boat took nothing without my order. I gave receipts for the articles just mentioned. I had previously noticed a one-story brick warehouse on the east side of Seventeenth street, between avenues B and C, quite isolated from other buildings, and thinking it might be possible to get through the large double front door with the boat, with great difficulty the boat was warped alongside the buildings, only to find that the door was partly blocked with wreckage. I made the boat fast outside the building; all hands went overboard, swam inside, and found a place of refuge on top of some cases of merchandise. The water inside this building was about 10 feet deep at the time we entered, the surface being about 4 feet below the top of the door and rising slowly. A close watch was kept on the water, the idea being to take to the boat again in case we were in danger of being imprisoned by the rise of the water.

Being in this building undoubtedly saved us from being badly injured, if not killed, as the hurricane was at its height at 9.30 p. m., the boat being struck by numerous pieces of brick, shale, etc. At 10.30 the water began to fall rapidly, going down about 3 feet in half an hour. The wind and current having diminished so that I was able to handle the boat with the oars, I again started out at 11.15 p. m. No one could be seen who needed assistance, so I pulled for the ship. Our way was blocked when we arrived within 100 yards of the ship by wrecked freight cars and houses. I moored the boat securely, head and stern, took all movable equipment with me, and arrived on board, all members of the boat's crew being present and unhurt at 12.20 a. m. on the 9th instant.

I took possession of the rope and food heretofore mentioned only because they were urgently needed and because I felt sure, under the circumstances, you would approve of my action. I inclose a bill for the above articles. (See inclosure No. 1).

The men composing the boat's crew behaved with the greatest bravery and in a manner highly creditable to the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States. I feel that I must make special mention of the conspicuous bravery of Ordinary Seaman J. Bierman, who, at the great risk of his life, repeatedly swam for long distances with lines, thus enabling me to move the boat after oars became useless.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAS. S. ROOT,

Second Assistant Engineer, Revenue-Cutter Service.

CHAS. T. BRIAN,

First Lieutenant, Revenue-Cutter Service, Commanding.

STATUTORY PROVISIONS RELATING TO THE OFFICIAL REGISTER.

[Act of Congress approved January 12, 1895.]

To enable the officer charged with the duty of preparing the Official Register of the United States to publish the same, the Secretary of the Senate the Clerk of the House of Representatives, the head of each executive department of the Government, and the chief of each and every bureau, office, commission, or institution not embraced in an executive department, in connection with which salaries are paid from the Treasury of the United States, shall, on the 1st day of July in each year in which a new Congress is to assemble, cause to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior a full and complete list of all officers, agents, clerks, and other employees of said department, bureau, office, commission, or institution connected with the legislative, executive, or judicial service of the Government, or paid from the United States Treasury, including military and naval officers of the United States, cadets, and midshipmen.

Said list shall exhibit the salary, compensation, and emoluments allowed to each of said officers, agents, clerks, and other employees, the State or county in which he was born, the State or Territory and Congressional district and county of which he is a resident and from which he was appointed to office, and where employed.

A list of the names, force, and condition of all ships and vessels belonging to the United States, and when and where built, shall also be filed with the Secretary of the Interior by the heads of the departments having supervision of such ships and vessels for incorporation in the Official Register.

It will be noticed that the foregoing requirements regarding the Blue Book require all the employees of the Government to be inserted therein, including military and naval officers. By legal construction the words "including military and naval officers" would exclude the enlisted men of the Army and Navy, but even then the Navy reports as officers the names, etc., of its warrant officers, such as boatswains, gunners, carpenters, warrant machinists, etc., and both Army and Navy report all of the civil employees, including the employees in the Engineering Department of the Army and at the naval yards and naval stations of the Navy.

While other branches of the Government which have control of vessels, such as the Light-House Service, the Fish Commission, the Army Transport Service, etc., furnished a complete list of all the employees in such services for publication in the Blue Book, the Revenue-Cutter Service is the one branch of the Government service which refuses or neglects to furnish such information, although there are now more than 1,000 employees of that service besides the commissioned officers, and although there are several hundred officers similar to the warrant officers reported by the Navy in the Blue Book, such as boatswains, gunners, carpenters, etc.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OLMSTED reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RANDELL of Louisiana, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business. And then, on motion of Mr. HEPBURN (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter to the Chief of Engineers, draft of a resolution authorizing certain payments to employees on the Government Printing Office building—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13084) granting an increase of pension to John Middleton, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

HEADQUARTERS CHINESE EMPIRE REFORM ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, Cal., March 19, 1902.

Senator W. E. MASON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: The members of this association, which was organized and is maintained for the purpose of elevating and civilizing the Chinese people according to the ideas of Western peoples, pray that your excellency will give heed to the following humble prayer:

Realizing that the greatest social and physical destruction of our people may be attributed to the use of that pernicious drug, opium, and also having knowledge of the wonderful increase in the consumption of that same potent poison by the members of your excellency's race in the United States, we hailed with gratitude the notices published in the American newspapers that your excellency had introduced a bill into the Senate of the United States which, when it becomes a law, will forever prohibit the importation of this curse of the earth into the ten times blessed land of your excellency.

It is our earnest prayer to your excellency that you will exert the great power with which your honored people have trusted you to induce the honorable body of which you are a member to pass this more than just law, that our people may learn to pray for the prosperity of the wise men of the West, who, with kindness in their hearts and respect for the great unwritten law of humane consideration uppermost in their minds, will have saved future generations of their own people from the slavery which a powerful nation forced upon the unhappy races of the Far East. For this we pray.

T. Y. HEE, Secretary.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3220) providing for an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial district. I think there will be no discussion about it.

Mr. HALE. Let us first take up the Calendar in regular order. After we have proceeded with the Calendar, if the Senator has reason for calling up this bill it can be done, but let us go first to the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. It will take less time to pass the bill than to discuss the order of business. I hope it will be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is before the Senate, and the bill called up by the Senator from Illinois was passed over without prejudice on a former day.

Mr. HALE. That is right, if it belongs to that class.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration. It provides that there shall be in the seventh circuit an additional circuit judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications, and shall have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation now prescribed by law in respect to the present circuit judges.

pay to Edward Haines, keeper of the Galveston life-saving station, and to John Haugland, Wallace L. Reed, and W. D. Davis, surfmen at that station, and Martin Monson, temporary surfman, and the legal representatives of J. P. Ferwerda, deceased, late temporary surfman at that station, and to Johann Bottjer, keeper of the San Luis life-saving station, such sums, respectively, as shall, on due inquiry by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, be found to be a just compensation to them for the loss in the Galveston hurricane of September 8, 1900, of such property belonging to them, respectively, as was necessary to be kept by them at said life-saving stations, from considerations of health, decency, and the nature of the service.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MALLORY on the 20th instant and read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4306) for the relief of Edward Haines, John Haugland, Wallace L. Reed, W. D. Davis, Martin Monson, Johann Bottjer, and the legal representatives of J. P. Ferwerda, deceased, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will appear by the following letters, which, with accompanying papers, annexed hereto, fully present the facts in the case.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 13, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, transmitting Senate bill 4306, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, "for the relief of Edward Haines, John Haugland, Wallace L. Reed, W. D. Davis, Martin Monson, Johann Bottjer, and the legal representatives of J. P. Ferwerda, deceased," for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The matter was referred to the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service for report, which has been received and is herewith transmitted with my concurrence.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF LIFE-SAVING SERVICE,
Washington, March 12, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference for report of the letter from the Committee on Commerce, United States Senate, dated the 5th instant, transmitting Senate bill 4306, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, for the relief of Edward Haines, John Haugland, Wallace L. Reed, W. D. Davis, Martin Monson, Johann Bottjer, and the legal representatives of J. P. Ferwerda, deceased, and asking for suggestions touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

The bill provides for payment to the persons mentioned of such sums, respectively, as shall on due inquiry by the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service be found to be a just compensation for the loss in the Galveston hurricane of September 8, 1900, of such property as was necessary to be kept by them at the life-saving stations from considerations of health, decency, and the nature of the service, and makes it the duty of the General Superintendent, after the approval of the act, to ascertain and report to the Secretary of the Treasury the sums payable to each of said persons under the provisions of the act.

Affidavits containing schedules of the property lost by the persons mentioned upon the occasion in question have been forwarded to this office, and copies of the same are transmitted herewith. It will be observed from the summary (herewith inclosed) that the claims as presented (allowance being made for error in addition) amount to $2,515.74.

The articles which appear to have been kept at the stations "from considerations of health, decency, and the nature of the service" have been separated from such as appear to have been kept there from choice and for personal convenience, and are indicated in the accompanying schedules in such a way as to admit of easy reference. The value of the articles of the first class is shown to be $903.49, and of those of the second class, $1,912.25.

Of the justice and equity of making reimbursement for the loss of the first class of articles, which is provided for in the bill, I think there can be no doubt. The second class stands, perhaps, on a somewhat different footing.

As the schedules herewith contain full information and data, and probably all the evidence obtainable, it is suggested that the bill might be amended, if deemed desirable, by specifying the amount to be allowed in each case. If, however, the question is left for this office to determine, its probable action in the premises is indicated in the accompanying papers.

In this connection I would call attention to the fact that in the deficiency appropriation acts of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 510), and March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., p. 849), provision was made for reimbursement of the crews of the Muskeget and Cahoon's Hollow life-saving stations, respectively, for such of their personal property lost by the burning of the stations as appeared to have been kept there from considerations of health, decency, and the nature of the service, excluding such as was kept from choice or for personal convenience.

Respectfully,

S. I. KIMBALL,
General Superintendent.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not care for a further reading of the report. I should like to inquire as to what amount is appropriated in the bill?

Mr. MALLORY. The amount is reduced to $603.49 and the claims are cut down to that sum.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF MINERS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator who reported that bill is not present. It is a House bill, and the report shows that the committee recommended the striking out of some portion of the bill and inserting something else in lieu of the part which was proposed to be stricken out; but the printed copy of the bill I have as reported does not indicate the amendment which the committee says ought to be adopted in lieu of the matter stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as now printed shows the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well. Then I have nothing to say about it.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "gases," to strike out:

And all workings shall be kept clear of standing gas. All owners, lessees, operators of, or any other person having the control or management of any coal shaft, drift, slope, or pit employing miners to work therein shall employ shot flers to fire the shots therein. Said shots shall be fired once a day on each day when any such shaft, slope, drift, or pit is in operation, but shall not be fired until after all miners and other employees working therein shall have been hoisted out of said mine.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Wherever it is practicable to do so the entries, rooms, and all openings being operated in coal mines shall be kept well dampened with water to cause the coal dust to settle, and that when water is not obtainable at reasonable cost for this purpose accumulations of dust shall be taken out of the mine, and shall not be deposited in way places in the mine where it would be again distributed in the atmosphere by the ventilating currents.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories" be amended by striking out "3,300" and inserting "5,000," so as to read:

"SEC. 6. That the owners or managers of every coal mine at a depth of 100 feet or more shall provide an adequate amount of ventilation of not less than 834 cubic feet of pure air per second, or 5,000 cubic feet per minute for every 50 men at work in said mine, and in like proportion for a greater number, which air shall by proper appliances or machinery be forced through such mine to the face of each and every working place, so as to dilute and render harmless and expel therefrom the noxious or poisonous gases. Wherever it is practicable to do so the entries, rooms, and all openings being operated in coal mines shall be kept well dampened with water to cause the coal dust to settle, and that when water is not obtainable at reasonable cost for this purpose accumulations of dust shall be taken out of the mine, and shall not be deposited in way places in the mine where it would be again distributed in the atmosphere by the ventilating currents. The violation of this act shall constitute a misdemeanor, and any person convicted of such violation shall pay a fine of not exceeding $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT RAINIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 255) for the improvement of the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $25,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of improving the Mount Rainier National Park, in the State of Washington, and for the protection of the park and the construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement and construction of roads.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT J. SPOTTSWOOD AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask that that bill may be passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

MRS. ARIVELLA D. MEEKER.

The bill (S. 1305) for the relief of Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Mrs. Arivella D. Meeker, of Greeley, Colo., the sum of $9,012.83, as a recognition of the services of her husband, the late Nathan Cook Meeker, as Indian agent at the White River Agency, in Colorado, and for the losses his family sustained by reason of his assassination and the destruction of his property by the Indians of said agency in the year 1879.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I notice that the report suggests that this money ought to be paid out of the annuities of the Confederate Bands of Ute Indians, and it was so provided in the original bill; but it is not in the amendment of the committee. I think it must have been omitted by oversight. I move to amend in line 14, on page 2, after the word "cents," by inserting

"out of the annuities of the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS OF LAND OFFICES IN KANSAS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 71) directing the Secretary of the Interior to restate the accounts of certain registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, was considered in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to restate the accounts of the registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas upon whom were imposed the duties and responsibilities of making sale and disposal of the Osage ceded, Osage trust, and Osage diminished reserve lands, in that State, under the treaty of September 29, 1865, between the United States and the Osage Indians, and the acts of Congress for carrying the treaty into effect, and to allow to each of the said registers and receivers for their service 1 per cent as commission on the proceeds arising from the sale and disposal of the lands received during their periods of service, respectively, less such amount heretofore received by them as commission on the proceeds, the sums so ascertained, to be stated separately as to each of the classes of lands, to be reported to Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. Let that joint resolution go over.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the joint resolution may be considered. It was originally in the form of an amendment, which was offered to an appropriation bill, and was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. In order to arrive at an exact understanding of the amounts supposed to be due, the committee authorized me to report a joint resolution recasting the accounts to be so stated, in order to get at the amounts claimed by the various parties.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the objection.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES GURLEY ELDERKIN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3743) granting an increase of pension to Frances Gurley Elderkin; which was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWARD THOMPSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2976) granting an increase of pension to Edward Thompson; which was, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW J. FELT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2371) granting a pension to Andrew J. Felt; which was, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives and ask for a conference with the House on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DEBOE, and Mr. TURNER were appointed.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that House bill 9206 be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Mr. PATTERSON. I present a petition to the Senate from the Cattle and Horse Growers' Association of Colorado, which represents 32 local live-stock associations, and as it relates to the bill now under discussion I ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the petition was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

MEMORIAL TO THE SENATE OF THE FIFTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

We, your memorialists, the Cattle and Horse Growers' Association of Colorado, beg to represent that we are an organization composed of nearly all of the local live-stock associations of the State and representing practically the entire live-stock industry of Colorado. The principal business of the members of this association is that of breeding, feeding, and marketing beef cattle.

There is now pending in the Senate of the United States a bill known as House bill No. 9206, which has already passed the House of Representatives, providing for a tax of 10 cents per pound on colored oleomargarine. We, your petitioners, desire to respectfully enter our protest against the passage of this bill into a law, believing that such legislation is against the interests of not only growers of beef cattle, sheep, and hogs in this State, but also against the interests of the farmers and dairymen, the latter class being led to believe that the passage of this bill will increase the price they will receive for butter; but we, your petitioners, are convinced that such would not be the result, and that the chief class to profit by such a measure would be the owners and operators of big creameries.

We would respectfully call the attention of your honorable body to the fact that oleomargarine is largely used upon the stock ranches of the western country, principally for the reason that it is a pure and wholesome article of diet and a good substitute for butter, which in many places is impossible to be had. It is also used largely in the mining and other labor districts of the nation and in localities where it is impossible to get fresh butter, and owing to its purity and keeping qualities oleomargarine is very much preferred as an article of diet.

The consumers of the product in the West prefer to have it colored yellow, as was the practice in Holland before the creamery manufacturers assumed to themselves this exclusive right, not with any intent to deceive themselves or others, but simply and solely because the color is more pleasing to the eye, and consequently makes the product more palatable.

Should this bill become a law it will not interfere with the consumption of this product in this State, as a majority of the consumers would pay as much for the oleomargarine as for butter, preferring the former product at the same price; consequently this tax of 10 cents per pound would have to come from the pockets of the consumers, who number thousands for every creamery or oleomargarine factory in the country.

We would also call the attention of the Senate to the fact that oleomargarine is largely composed of the product of beef and dairy cattle, which we raise, the percentage being oleo oil (from the beef) 28.83, milk, butter, and cream 25.89 per cent, and should the proposed law diminish the consumption of oleomargarine in other parts of the country, it would result in a decreased use of these products from our beef and dairy cattle, and a consequent decrease in the value of the same.

It is the opinion of your memorialists that the confessed object of this bill—to prevent the use and consumption of oleomargarine as an article of food, to curtail its manufacture, and, if possible, to suppress its use altogether—would not be attained by the proposed law. As the laws and regulations already governing the manufacture of this article are sufficiently severe on those who attempt to sell it as butter, the increased price incident to the proposed law would be simply offering a premium to the men who are braving the present laws, and would result in an increased use of this imitation of butter under the name of butter.

We, your memorialists, are in favor of any reasonable law which will compel the manufacturers of this article of diet to sell the same as oleomargarine, but we are of the firm belief that the proposed bill would be most vicious legislation and is more calculated to injure the dairy business than, as alleged by the creamery combine, to grant the dairymen and farmers a relief from the competition of oleomargarine.

We are heartily in favor of the so-called Wadsworth bill, which provides that this product should be manufactured only in 1 and 2 pound packages, each package to be carefully labeled and stamped. As a large number of your memorialists are users of this product and prefer it to butter for the reasons above given, they naturally desire to know that they are securing oleomargarine rather than renovated butter, which is unhealthy and becomes rancid soon after being taken to the ranches, and naturally would favor any fair law which will enable us to know that we are securing just what we pay for.

Therefore we most earnestly protest against the said bill now pending before your honorable body, and most respectfully urge that it be not enacted into law.

And for this your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the controversy between butter and oleomargarine is one of long standing. The issue raised by this controversy has been so fully discussed in both branches of Congress and before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate that the arguments and facts for and against this legislation are generally familiar to the Senate. I can not say, and I do not hope to say, anything new upon this subject, but it is probable that the people are not so familiar with these facts and these arguments as are Senators, and while primarily the object of discussion here is to enlighten the Senate, it is also important and useful in informing and instructing the people.

I am opposed to the pending bill, because, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I have been present at most of the hearings during this session, and I have read most of the evidence at hearings at other times and in the other House of Congress, and they satisfy my mind, at least, that oleomargarine is not only a healthful but a nutritious article of diet, and that the coloring matter which is placed in it is not injurious, but adds greatly to its market value and acceptability to the consumer, as does the same coloring matter in the case of white butter when it is placed in that article, and because, being a healthy and nutritious article of diet, in my judgment, the manufacturers of oleomargarine have a right, which ought not to be denied to them, and which can not be legally and constitutionally denied to them, to use in the manufacture of their product any article which is not deleterious to the health of the consumer.

Mr. President, I do not believe the charges that are so persistently made by the advocates of this measure, that to any considerable extent the materials used in the manufacture of oleomargarine are improper or injurious. I do not believe these charges, because the evidence which has been adduced before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the hearings to which I have referred contains nothing to support them, but contains much to refute them; and I do not believe them, because there is easy at hand to every manufacturer of oleomargarine the greatest abundance of pure materials to be had at such low prices as to preclude the temptation to practice this fraud upon the public.

I have no doubt that in the beginning of this industry in this country there were many questionable experimentations and even rascalities in the selection and use of materials that enter into oleomargarine by the manufacturer; but in 1886 Congress passed an act placing all these factories under the control and supervision of the Government, and since that time I do not believe that there have been any abuses worth mentioning practiced in connection with the manufacture of that article. So far as the manufacturers of oleomargarine are concerned, since these inspection laws went into force, I am satisfied that both in the selection of the materials which they use and in the processes which they employ in its manufacture there is no manufactured food product in this country, not excepting butter, which is produced with greater purity and cleanliness than oleomargarine is sent out from the factories.

I am satisfied, and I think the opponents of this bill are satisfied, that there is now, and has been all along, more or less fraud practiced by the retailers of oleomargarine in representing and selling their product for butter for the purpose of securing the higher profit allowed by butter prices. I am satisfied that is so; and is so to such an extent that it calls for action by Congress, because the evidence tends to show that this class of fraud is practiced more or less wherever oleomargarine is sold. I am satisfied it is so for other reasons, chief among them the fact that the present law regulating the sale of oleomargarine, which permits the manufacturer to put it up in packages of 10 pounds and sell it to the retailer, offers to these retailers easy opportunities to commit fraud of this character with comparative safety on their part.

Some of the oleomargarine retail dealers, like the retail dealers in other lines of commerce, are rascals; some of them are unscrupulous; some of them take advantage of the opportunities afforded them by the present inefficient law to make a fraudulent profit in the conduct of their business.

Mr. President, because we are satisfied that these frauds are practiced on the part of retail dealers, and to such an extent as would call for further legislation on this subject by Congress, the opponents of this measure are perfectly willing to vote and stand ready to vote for any measure the sole object of which is to suppress and prevent these frauds; but we are not willing to vote for a measure based upon the absurd theory that in order to prevent fraud in the sale of this article it is necessary to prevent its sale altogether. Nor do we propose to vote for a measure which, under the pretext of suppressing fraud in the sale of an article, seeks to outlaw that article and drive it out of the market altogether.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], in his very able speech delivered in this Chamber last week, in an impassioned denunciation of oleomargarine, exclaimed, "We are dealing with a question of fraud;" and so we are dealing with a question of fraud and a fraud that ought to be punished and ought to be suppressed. But I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it is not the custom in this country, at least, to punish fraud by killing the rascally perpetrator of the fraud, and it is not the custom in this country, at least, to seek to suppress fraud in the sale of an article by ostracizing that article and banishing it from the markets.

The opponents of this bill stand ready to vote for the most drastic measure having for its object the suppression of the frauds complained of, and which it is admitted to some extent exist, and on this behalf the minority of the committee have presented a substitute which it is believed will effectually accomplish this purpose.

Now, Mr. President, let me analyze this substitute and compare it with other admittedly effectual legislation against similar frauds. First, it places every factory where oleomargarine is manufactured under the closest Government inspection and espionage. Second, it requires every pound of oleomargarine to be put up in packages of 1 and 2 pounds and in no other or larger or smaller packages. Third, the article itself is to be impressed in sunken letters with the word "oleomargarine." Thus impressed, it is to be wrapped in a paper wrapper with the word "oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, together with the name of the manufacturer, and the article thus impressed and wrapped is to be placed in wooden or paper packages, upon which shall be branded the word "oleomargarine," and the whole is to be circled with a Government oleomargarine stamp. Fourth, no oleomargarine is permitted to be sold by manufacturer or retailer except in unbroken packages of 1 or 2 pounds. Fifth, the product, both in the hands of the retail dealer and the manufacturer, is constantly under the espionage of the Government, and the slightest infraction in any of these and other regulations provided in the substitute will subject the violator to heavy fines and penalties.

Can there be any reasonable doubts that the provisions of this substitute, if enacted into a law, would effectually put an end to the frauds and deceits complained of? I do not believe there is, and I doubt whether there are many who do honestly believe there is any such doubt.

A partial answer to this question will be found in the effect of a similar act to prevent the fraudulent sale of what is known as filled cheese for dairy cheese. A few years ago the manufacturers of dairy cheese raised a great clamor on account of the alleged fraudulent sale of this imitation product as cheese. Congress was asked to interfere to put an end to this alleged counterfeit and fraud, just as the dairymen are now asking it to protect butter. In response to their demand Congress passed an act defining dairy cheese and filled cheese, and differentiating the two and making certain regulations for the sale of filled cheese, so as to put a stop to these frauds. For the purpose of showing the character of this legislation I wish to read section 6 of the act:

SEC. 6. That filled cheese shall be packed by the manufacturers in wooden packages only, not before used for that purpose, and marked, stamped, and branded with the words "filled cheese" in black-faced letters not less than 2 inches in length, in a circle in the center of the top and bottom of the cheese; and in black-faced letters of not less than 2 inches in length in line from the top to the bottom of the cheese, on the side in four places equidistant from each other; and the package containing such cheese shall be marked in the same manner, and in the same number of places, and in the same description of letters as above provided for the marking of the cheese; and all sales or consignments made by manufacturers of filled cheese to wholesale dealers in filled cheese or to exporters of filled cheese shall be in original stamped packages.

Retail dealers in filled cheese shall sell only from original stamped packages, and shall pack the filled cheese when sold in suitable wooden or paper packages, which shall be marked and branded in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Every person who knowingly sells or offers to sell, or delivers or offers to deliver filled cheese in any other form than in new wooden or paper packages, marked and branded as hereinbefore provided, and as above described, or who packs in any package or packages filled cheese in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined for each and every offense not less than $50 and not more than $500, or be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year.

Under that act filled cheese is placed under governmental supervision and the manufacturer is required to stamp and brand every package of filled cheese and the retailer is permitted to sell it only out of these branded packages. Before the passage of this law there was a great deal of trouble on account of fraudulent sales of filled cheese as dairy cheese, not only at home but especially in foreign markets, and our consular representatives abroad were constantly representing to the Government that this imitation and fraudulent product was undermining our cheese market abroad.

Since the passage of that act the evidence taken before the committee shows that these complaints, both at home and abroad, have totally ceased, and there is no suggestion to-day from any source that filled cheese is being sold to any considerable extent in imitation of dairy cheese.

It is the duty of the Treasury Department to enforce all laws and regulations to prevent frauds against the revenues of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury is supposed, by reason of his experience in the enforcement of these laws, to be especially informed as to their sufficiency to accomplish the object of their enactment.

Now, when this bill and the pending substitute was before the Fifty-sixth Congress, the question of the adequacy of this substitute to suppress the frauds complained of was raised before the committee having the bill under investigation, and the then Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Lyman J. Gage, was examined as a witness upon these points. The evidence he then gave is a complete answer to all of the arguments of the advocates of this bill, to the effect that the only remedy for this fraud is in practically denying the manufacturers of oleomargarine the right to color their products. Let me read the evidence of Secretary Gage before the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER—

Mr. Springer appeared before the committee, I believe, as the attorney of the Live Stock Association, and as such was permitted to participate in the hearing by asking questions of witnesses.

Mr. SPRINGER. The difficulties which have been called to the attention of the committee in regard to the selling of oleomargarine or butterine seem to relate to the fact that the retail dealer may break the original package and deal it out in smaller quantities to suit the desires of the purchaser, and in so doing he can sell oleomargarine or butterine to a consumer who presumes that he is buying butter.

Now, I desire to ask you whether it would be possible to make such rules and regulations (if the law so authorizes) requiring the selling of oleomargarine to the consumer by the agents of the manufacturer or the retail dealer in the original package, without breaking even the stamp itself around the original package, that the selling of oleomargarine for butter would be prevented, and it would have to be sold for what it really is?

Secretary GAGE. I think so. I have read the amendment or substitute bill recommended by the minority report of the House committee.

That is the same that the minority of the committee now present.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is what is known as the Wadsworth bill?

Secretary GAGE. It provides a method of putting up oleomargarine in packages of 1 pound or not more than 2 pounds, I believe. Am I right?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; that is right.

Secretary GAGE. They are, as I understand, required to be separate and distinct from each other, with a revenue stamp wound around them and sealed as effectively as a box of cigars is with its stamp. I can not imagine any reason why that would not be a very effective means of preventing the dealer from opening these packages and selling the product as butter. The abuse in that respect would be reduced to an infinitesimal amount. Of course, a dealer could cut a package in two, obliterate the stamp, and sell half a pound at a time as butter.

Senator MONEY. That is possible with cigars and everything else, is it not?

Secretary GAGE. It is possible in every department, but the temptation would be so small, and the penalties so great, that my opinion is that such deception would scarcely be practiced at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is to say, if the dealer is required to sell it to the consumer in the original packages and is not allowed to break them?

Secretary GAGE. That is what I mean.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would almost do away with the possibility of fraud on the consumer?

Secretary GAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, in view of this evidence of the Secretary, in view of the effect of the filled-cheese act, I want to ask why are not the advocates of this bill, if their sole purpose is to suppress fraud, and if it is no part of their purpose, as is charged, to suppress competition and to destroy another industry, willing to accept the substitute? It certainly is no answer to say that the present law has not been effective. Of course it has not. It does not require Secretary Gage or even a lawyer to see that the present law is wide open to the frauds which are admitted to exist and which we all want to suppress. What does their refusal to accept the substitute as a settlement of this matter signify? What does it mean? To my mind it can mean but one thing. It means what is apparent from the bill itself and what was disclosed by the hearings before the committee and what is shown in the hysterical appeals that have been made in this debate on behalf of the cow. It shows that their purpose is not to suppress fraud; it is not to prevent fraud in the sale of this article so much as it is to protect the cow and her products and to suppress a competitor.

Mr. President, so far as oleomargarine is concerned, it is not a direct competitor of high-class dairy butter, although it is an indirect competitor of that article. It is not a direct competitor, because the difference in price removes it from the field of competition. High-class dairy butter at its present price sells in the market at from 30 to 40 cents a pound net. Even when you add the 10-cent tax proposed by this bill to the present price of oleomargarine it will still sell upon the market, when sold upon its merits, as I think it generally is, though sometimes it is not, at from 10 to 16 cents less than high-class dairy butter. But while oleomargarine is not a direct competitor of high-class dairy butter, it is a direct competitor of what is known as renovated butter and an indirect competitor of high-class butter.

I know, Mr. President, that it is claimed that dealers in high-class dairy butter have no interest in renovated or process butter, and that they are willing to let it stand upon its own merits and fight its own battles. But it is perfectly obvious that this is not true, and that they are interested and deeply interested in renovated butter. Why? Because they are interested in anything that preserves and prolongs the life of their product, and renovated butter is a dairy product, though a degenerated dairy product. The prolongation of the life of their product is an important element in the value of their product. That is exactly what the process factories do. They reclaim and rereclaim and reclaim again dairy butter from rancidity and from death, and by chemical process impart to it a sort of perennial youth and freshness, and in this way these process factories become a potent element in the market value of the whole dairy product.

The object of the bill is, therefore, not to protect dairy butter against the direct competition of oleomargarine, but it is to destroy competition between oleomargarine and what is known as process or renovated butter, and by driving it from the market altogether make a full demand and high-price market both for the fresh product and this degenerate product of the dairy. Those who are denouncing oleomargarine as a vile counterfeit have found nothing to condemn in renovated butter and its fraudulent sale as a pure, fresh product of the dairy. Of course, the widespread sale of this chemically manipulated concoction is a fraud, and they know it is a fraud; but it is a fraud against the people and not against the cow. It is said there are those who think a dollar is more sacred than a man, and I am afraid there are also those who, in their zeal for the dairy, think a cow is more entitled to protection against fraud than the people.

I was glad that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] during the past week presented an amendment to the pending bill having for its purpose putting renovated butter under the same strict governmental supervision and control that this bill proposes to place around and upon oleomargarine. I trust the Senator will press that amendment, and I hope he will force a ye-a-and-may vote upon it. In that event I shall watch with profound interest the votes of the friends of this bill. I predict now that they will not vote for this amendment. And why? Because the same interest that is behind this bill, the same interest that has hounded oleomargarine from the day it was born as an industry in this country, the same interest that has excited all of the public prejudice and the hostile State legislation enacted against this product—I mean the dairy interest—is interested to see that renovated butter is not fettered and restricted as it demands oleomargarine shall be.

Now, Mr. President, what is process butter or renovated butter? I am not going to trouble the Senate by reading from the evidence to any considerable extent upon this subject, but I do desire to read what Professor Alvord has to say. I believe he is at the head of the Dairy Bureau of the Agricultural Department, and I believe he is not only famous as an expert in dairy products in this country but that he is also known throughout the world as such. Here is a letter written by him February 8, 1900, in which, in describing what process butter is, he says:

FEBRUARY 8, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Your inquiry has been received relating to process or renovated butter.

We have nothing printed upon this subject, and it would be impossible to give you a full account of it within the limits of a letter.

Briefly, it is butter which has become unmerchantable, or what we would call bad butter, running through all the degrees of badness, bought up cheaply, brought together in large quantity, reduced to a limpid oil by melting, and clarified by both chemical and mechanical processes, which are more or less secret. The oil is then drawn off, a semblance of the crystallization or granulation of butter fat is obtained by chilling, usually by spraying the fat into ice water, and then it is re churned with more or less sour milk or buttermilk to give it the new flavor, salted, and made up for market.

It is in this form just what the name "renovated" implies. Unless adulterated with other fats, which is not usual, it can be claimed to be pure butter, as far as chemical composition is concerned. But many of the characteristics of good and fresh butter are lacking, and the renovated article deteriorates very rapidly unless it is kept quite cold.

The chief objection to this renovated butter is that it is sold in large quantities under misrepresentation in place of fresh creamery butter—and at prices much above its actual value. Fraud upon purchasers and consumers is thus perpetrated, and this is the feature connected with the business which needs governmental interference and regulation.

The gravamen of the charge against oleomargarine—

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY E. ALVORD.

Dr. J. J. BAUMANN,

661 Jersey Avenue, Jersey City, N. J.

Now, in brief, Mr. President, renovated butter is old, rancid, unmarketable butter, gathered up from the four quarters of the country—from the hotels, and the restaurants, and the boarding houses, and the country stores—and sent to these process factories; there it meets the product of the cow of the treeless prairies of the West, and of the rocky hills of New England, and of the wire-grass region of the South in sympathetic and friendly embrace; there, with the aid of acids and adroit chemical surgery, the seeds of disease and death with which it has become infected are removed, and thus restored to apparent health, it is sent out as healthy butter, looking like healthy butter, with the sweet odor and with the exquisite flavor of perfectly well butter, and in that guise it is sold and bought and consumed.

But, Mr. President, this restoration to health is only temporary. This newfound freshness is short lived, and unless it is speedily bought and consumed it soon has a relapse to its old condition of rancidity. But there is one consolation about this patient. However often it may have a relapse, and however severe the disease may be, there is always a sure restorative and an unfailing panacea to be found in the numerous butter hospitals scattered about in this country, created and existing for the sole and exclusive purpose of treating and curing the disease to which creamery butter is unfortunately a victim.

Mr. President, we hear a great deal about the anticolor laws of the States against oleomargarine. Gentlemen have fallen back upon those laws as an excuse for their effort through this bill to strike down the oleomargarine industry. I want to remind gentlemen who rely upon those laws as a justification for this legislation that there are also State laws in this country against renovated and process butter. I do not know how many States have laws of that kind; I believe about ten or twelve. I appeal to the gentlemen who place their support of this bill upon the fact that certain States have ostracised oleomargarine when they go to vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas they that give the same consideration and significance to the State laws against renovated butter as to those against oleomargarine, and when they vote to protect the cow against oleomargarine that they will at the same time vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to protect the people against renovated butter.

Mr. President, about the only argument I have heard in favor of this legislation, except the fraud argument to which I have so far chiefly devoted myself, is the fact that many of the States have enacted laws against the sale of oleomargarine. It is said by the friends of this bill that those laws show such a general antipathy on the part of the people against this product that it furnishes them a sufficient justification for this legislation.

I frankly admit that those laws apparently indicate (and I say apparently advisedly) a very harsh sentiment on the part of the people of those States toward oleomargarine. But when we analyze the reasons and considerations which led to the enactment of those laws, we will see, as I said, that it is more an apparent antipathy and objection than a real one. Most of those laws were passed under the influence of a misunderstanding created by the agitation and the exaggeration and the falsehoods instigated and put in circulation by the dairy interest as to the materials which enter into the manufacture of this product.

At the time they were passed there was a general misunderstanding in the country as to the character of the ingredients of the article. It was generally supposed that the article was made up of loathsome and repulsive ingredients, repugnant to the taste, and poisonous to the human system. This was the impression not only in those States at that time, but it was the impression among the enlightened members of this body and of the House when that measure was first discussed and debated in Congress. The only argument made in favor of the law was the argument that oleomargarine was unhealthy and poisonous to the human system. The fraud argument that we now hear was not made then at all.

Now, time has removed from the field of disputation and discussion the fundamental fact upon which this discriminating legislation of the States was based. When we consider whether State laws or national laws are wise or unwise and whether they indicate a certain public sentiment or feeling, we must look to the reasons which inspired the enactment of those laws. If there was a mistake as to facts, as to the grounds upon which the enactment was made, the reason for it failing, we may expect sooner or later that it will be repealed.

Now, Mr. President, the only ground upon which this State legislation was originally based has been removed and no longer exists, but the advocates of the bill say if that be so, why then have not those laws been repealed by the States? They have not been repealed because another reason for their continuance on the statute books has intervened and furnishes a justification for their continuance, and that is the reason I have just given why we should pass the minority substitute. I mean the necessity of regulating its sale so as to prevent deceits in selling it for what it is not. Remove this reason, as the other has been removed, by the National Government taking hold of this question and placing around the article a strict supervision to prevent the class of fraud to protect themselves against which the States still keep these prohibitory acts upon their statute books, and I predict that the States will be satisfied and that speedily and rapidly every one of the anticolor laws against oleomargarine will be repealed.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate in discussing the proposition that time and experience and science have proved that the original basis of this legislation has been removed, for it is now almost universally admitted that at the time of the passage of these prohibitory laws the character of oleomargarine and its effect upon the human system were altogether misunderstood, and that it is not only not an unhealthy article, but it is an exceedingly healthy and nutritious food product. One of the chief advocates of this bill in debate in the other branch of Congress a few days ago admitted this fact, and the evidence taken before the committees of the two Houses during the last and the present session (evidence of the best scientific experts in the country) proves conclusively that the arguments which prevailed in securing the passage of these laws were based upon falsehood and misunderstanding as to the ingredients and qualities of this article.

I wish to read some of the evidence upon this point. It is so conclusive, so overwhelming, it has practically silenced this clamor and forced the advocates of this legislation to put their support of it upon entirely new grounds. I read from the report of the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate appointed during the Fifty-sixth Congress. A part of the report which I read will be found printed on pages 57 and 59 of the committee's report, which is as follows:

In regard to butterine or oleomargarine it is not claimed by any of the witnesses before your committee that it is in any way deleterious to public health. On the contrary, all expert evidence upon this point strongly confirms the testimony of the manufacturers of this article, to the effect that it is a healthful food product. The testimony shows that this product is the result of a combination of beef and pork fats, butter, cream, and milk with coloring matter, which is similar to that universally used by farmers and dairies engaged in the manufacture of butter for the coloring of that product. As under the resolution under which this committee is operating it is made one of its duties to investigate food products and to ascertain what is sold that is deleterious to the public health, your committee made every effort to obtain information upon this branch of the subject, and in addition to oral testimony there were submitted authorities of an expert character, as follows:

Henry Morton, Stevens Institute Technology, New Jersey: "It contains nothing whatever which is injurious as an article of diet; but, on the contrary, is essentially identical with the best fresh butter."

S. C. Caldwell, chemical laboratory, Cornell University: "Possesses no qualities whatever that can make it in the least degree unwholesome."

Charles P. Williams, analytical chemist, Philadelphia: "It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as in respect to its chemical composition, is fully the equivalent of the best dairy butter."

Henry A. Mott, analytical chemist, New York: "Essentially identical with butter made from cream, and a perfectly pure and wholesome article."

W. O. Atwater, Wesleyan University, Connecticut: "It is perfectly wholesome and healthy, and has a high and nutritious value."

Scientific American: "Oleomargarine is as much a farm product as beef or butter, and is as wholesome as either."

Prof. Charles F. Chandler, New York City: "The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food."

Prof. George F. Barker, University of Pennsylvania: "It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food."

I will also read a few opinions of leading scientists, which I find on pages 4 and 5 of Senate Document 2043:

OPINIONS OF LEADING SCIENTISTS.

Prof. C. F. Chandler, professor of chemistry at Columbia College, New York, says: "I have studied the question of its use as food, in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food."

Prof. George F. Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, says: "Butterine is, in my opinion, quite as valuable as a nutritive agent as butter itself. It is perfectly wholesome, and is desirable as an article of food. I can see no reason why butterine should not be an entirely satisfactory equivalent for ordinary butter, whether considered from the physiological or commercial standpoint."

Prof. S. W. Johnson, director of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, and professor of agricultural chemistry in Yale College, New Haven, says: "It is a product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is, for all ordinary and culinary purposes, the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. I regard the manufacture of oleomargarine as a legitimate and beneficial industry."

Prof. C. A. Goessmann, of Amherst Agricultural College, says: "Oleomargarine butter compares in general appearance and in taste very favorably with the average quality of the better kinds of dairy butter in our markets. In its composition it resembles that of ordinary dairy butter, and in its keeping quality, under corresponding circumstances, I believe it will surpass the former, for it contains a smaller percentage of those constituents which, in the main, cause the well-known rancid taste and odor of a stored butter."

Prof. J. W. S. Arnold, professor of physiology in the University of New York, says: "I consider that each and every article employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine butter is perfectly pure and wholesome; that oleomargarine butter differs in no essential manner from butter made from cream. In fact oleomargarine butter possesses the advantage over natural butter of not decomposing so readily, as it contains fewer volatile fats. In my opinion oleomargarine is to be considered a great discovery, a blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food."

Prof. Paul Schweitzer, Ph. D., LL. D., professor of chemistry, Missouri State University, says: "As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter."

Now, Mr. President, if this bill passes the effect will be not only to prevent the manufacture and sale of colored oleomargarine, but to cripple the whole oleomargarine industry in this country. There are two reasons why it will destroy the manufacture of colored oleomargarine: First, because colored oleomargarine is now sold for only 3 or 4 cents more than the cost of production, and when you add to this the 10 cents tax proposed by this bill it will, on account of the price, be unsalable. Secondly, if this bill passes this first section would make effectual the anticolor laws of the several States, which are now ineffectual and largely inoperative because of the decision of the Supreme Court in the original package case and in the Schollerberger case. The sole object of the first section of this bill is, by breathing life into these laws, to make oleomargarine a contraband of commerce, to take from it its character as a commercial product and deny it the protection of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, which the Supreme Court decided it is entitled to enjoy, and place it in the category of spirituous liquors.

The effect would be to take from colored oleomargarine 60,000,000 of its possible purchasers and consumers who live in the States in which these laws have been passed. Its passage may not stop the manufacture of uncolored oleomargarine, but it will handicap it to such an extent as to make its profitable manufacture extremely doubtful, because it is well known, on account of the taste and fancy of the consumer (the same taste and fancy which dictates to the producer of white butter coloring matter to make it more palatable and pleasing), that there is practically no demand, or at least such a limited demand, for the uncolored article as butter as to make its manufacture for that purpose unprofitable, and the other demands for white oleomargarine are so limited that it is extremely doubtful whether its use would be sufficiently large to remunerate the large amount of capital invested in this industry.

Mr. President, in addition to the destruction of the oleomargarine industry and the millions of dollars worth of property invested in that industry, let us inquire what other important and legitimate occupations and industries will be affected by this legislation. Now, it is said that butter is a product of the farm; that the cow stands at the threshold of all agricultural prosperity, and that both she and her product should be protected. I do not deny the great value of the dairy cow. The dairy interest is one which should be encouraged, and the use of the cow in the home and upon the farm can not be overestimated. Both she and her product are entitled to all legitimate encouragement and protection.

But oleomargarine is also a farm product and an honest and legitimate industry. Practically everything that enters into it is made upon the farm—milk, cream, butter, cotton-seed oil, neutral lard, and oleo oil, all of them farm products, and at least 40 per cent of them the product of the cow herself. Chemically it is the same as butter. It has every chemical ingredient that butter has and none other. Now, the people who furnish the larger part of the ingredients that enter into oleomargarine are the cotton-seed oil manufacturers and the growers of beef cattle and hogs. These people believe, and honestly believe, that this legislation will affect them injuriously, and they are here protesting against its passage. They have sent representatives here; they have sent petitions here; they have sent resolutions here. I have here the resolutions passed by the cotton-seed oil superintendents of North and South Carolina, at a meeting held in July, 1900, at Charleston, S. C. I will read them, for they show the opinion of these skilled managers of this great Southern industry as to the effect of this legislation upon their business and through them upon the grower of cotton seed.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF OIL MILLS IN NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

Resolutions against oleomargarine tax offered at meeting of cotton-oil mill superintendents:

"CHARLESTON, S. C., July 6.

"Cotton-oil superintendents from South Carolina and North Carolina met yesterday at the Calhoun Hotel for the purpose of organizing the cotton-oil mill superintendents' association.

"After the constitution and by-laws were read and adopted, the following resolutions were offered by A. A. Haynes:

"Resolved, That this association, representing millions of dollars of invested capital in the South, strongly protests against national class legislation which aims directly at the destruction of competition in the manufacture and sale of wholesome and healthful articles of food.

"Resolved, That we protest strenuously against the passage by Congress of the Groul oleomargarine bill, which proposes to tax oleomargarine 10 cents per pound, and thus to drive it from the market.

"Resolved, That this association implores Congress not to destroy an industry which now uses nearly 10,000,000 pounds of the best grade of cotton-seed oil annually, and thus kill that quantity of our most profitable output.

"Resolved, That we urge the legislatures of South Carolina and of other Southern States to remove from their statute books the antioleomargarine legislation thereon, because such acts are only in the interest of the renovated and process butter factories of the North and Northwest, and against the hog fats, beef fats, and cotton-seed oil products grown on our Southern farms.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the National Provisioner, of New York and Chicago, the indomitable champion of the cotton-oil interests, for publication, and that the members of this association proceed to secure, if possible, the repeal of the obnoxious State laws above referred to.

"Resolved, That this association will do what it can to cause the defeat of the Groul antioleomargarine bill in Congress during the coming session."

Among the cotton-seed oil manufacturers who appeared before the committee of the Senate during the Fiftieth Congress against this bill was Mr. D. A. Tompkins, of my State. I know Mr. Tompkins well. He is largely interested not only in cotton-seed oil mills, but in various lines of manufacturing. He is one of the most prominent and useful men in the whole South, a leader in its industrial development, a man of broad information, accurate knowledge, and absolutely reliable in his statements. In the speech made by him before the committee he stated:

I say that if they pass this legislation they will undo it later, because they will hear from their constituents again when they do it. And why? Because, for instance, if you pass this law throughout the whole South you will appreciate the products of corporate dairies, of men with large fortunes, while you will depreciate by $2 a ton all the cotton seed that is sold in the South to a cotton-seed oil mill.

If petitions from farmers were any good, and if these cotton-seed oil people had had the foresight to go about it, they could have gotten a petition signed by every cotton farmer in the South, because practically none of them have any interest whatever in the dairy business, and every single one of them has an interest in the cotton-seed oil industry to the sake of making or losing $2 a ton, according to whether you pass this bill or whether you do not pass it.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do you think it would depreciate cotton-seed oil? Mr. TOMPKINS. I know it.

Mr. KNIGHT. If there is any other representative of the cotton-seed interest here I would like to get him to give me the figures as to the interests of the cotton-seed oil people here. According to a little calculation I have made, the amount of cotton-seed oil used in oleomargarine constitutes less than two-thirds of 1 per cent of their gross output.

Mr. TOMPKINS. I can tell you right now that they have $3,000,000 worth of interest a year in it, if this bill is passed in depreciation of the value of cotton seed. According to my estimate of 3,000,000 tons of cotton seed which are used for making oil every year, their loss would be $6,000,000 a year—the loss of the cotton-seed people alone. Now, you would bleed the working people of the country of ten millions more, and you would bleed the stock people of five. That is what you would do. That is an estimate of the value, in dollars and cents, of these interests.

Not only the manufacturer of this oil is interested in maintaining this market for his product, but the Southern farmer who makes the seed out of which this oil is made is also interested, and surely there is no class of people in this country who need more help than the cotton farmers of the South, and against whom discriminating legislation is more unjust, for in all the prosperity about which we hear so much the cotton farmer of the South has had but little share.

While the prices of other products have gone up, the price of his, except for a little while during the year 1900, has ranged so low it is with difficulty he has been able to make a living. For these reasons he is weak and ill able to stand such a blow as this. True, he is sometimes a dairyman and makes a little butter to sell, but in the South there are at least 20 farmers and laborers who buy all the butter they consume to every Southern farmer who makes butter to sell, and the one who sells always finds a ready market at remunerative prices right at his door. I have had no petitions or letters from the farmers of my State for this bill, except from a few dairy farmers, and most of these bear evidence of having been inspired by the dairy trust.

When representatives of the cotton interests and the live-stock interests come here protesting against this legislation as injurious to their interests they are waived away and told that they do not know what they are talking about. One Senator the other day in the debate here rolled as a sweet morsel under his tongue the declaration of the Secretary of Agriculture with reference to the statement of a stock raiser that the passage of this bill would depreciate the value of beef cattle, when he said that "he does not know what he is talking about—that same cattle man."

The statements and representations and the petitions and appeals of the farmers of the South and the stock growers of the West fall upon deaf ears. They are told that they do not know what they are talking about, that they do not know what their interest is. Yet when we are considering tariff measures here and making schedules and imposing duties for the protection of home products against foreign products, the representatives of the great trust combinations and of the great protected industries come here and make all sorts of wild representations as to the effect of legislation upon their business, and they are accepted with childlike credulity and they are given whatever they demand.

That is what has often been seen here in the past. It will be seen again when we get to making tariff schedules. Representatives of these great combinations and protected interests who are selling their products in foreign markets for 25 and 30 per cent less than they are selling them in this country will come here and demand that the protection accorded them against foreign competition be continued, and with full knowledge of these facts as to the prices for which they are selling their products abroad their demands will be granted, and the protection they now enjoy but do not need will be continued.

Now, Mr. President, I say that the cotton-seed oil men are interested. Why do I say it?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know to what extent the protection of the cotton-seed oil interests is to be carried? As the Senator is probably well aware, it is now an absolute impossibility to buy a bottle of pure olive oil in this city. I will venture to say that no Senator can buy a bottle of olive oil in this city. Whether it has a French label or an Italian label, it is invariably principally cotton-seed oil. We can not buy a box of sardines, whether they are packed on the coast of Maine or on the shores of the Mediterranean, that they are not put up in cotton-seed oil and saturated with it. Does the Senator mean to say that we have got to justify the use of cotton-seed oil all along these lines when it masquerades as something which it is not?

Mr. SIMMONS. To the extent, Mr. President, that cotton-seed oil, or oleomargarine, or any other product masquerades for what it is not, I am just as willing and as anxious as the Senator to pass legislation which will put an end to that masquerading. If cotton-seed oil, or any other farm product in the South, has obtained any protection against the competition of olive oil or any other foreign product that is sold in this country in competition with it, it has nothing more than what is due to it. Although we have not asked for it, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] suggests, Southern interests are entitled to it, because in the application of the general principle of protection, without any regard to the right or wrong of that principle, it would be unjust to discriminate against the products of one section and in favor of the products of another section. If that is to be a principle of government, it should be administered with sectional impartiality.

But, Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the phase of this question which I am now discussing. It is not whether there should be protection against a foreign product, but whether we should inaugurate here in this country a system of internal tariff duties, and whether we should use the taxing power of the Government for the purpose of building up one home industry by destroying another. That is what this bill will do if it becomes a law. It is using the taxing power of the Government for the purpose of building up and promoting and fostering the dairy interests of this country at the expense of and to the injury of the cotton-seed oil interests and the stock-raising interests in this country.

Now, I say these cotton-seed-oil men know what they are talking about. They have protested and they do protest against this legislation. They have passed resolutions, they have sent petitions, and they have sent representatives here to Congress to present their grievances and to protest against this legislation.

When Mr. Tompkins, of my State, was before the committee, in his statement, to which I have before referred, he said that the destruction of the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country meant the depreciation to the extent of $2 a ton for every ton of cotton-seed used in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

But you say that does not affect anything except the cotton seed that is used in oleomargarine. Mr. Tompkins answered that in his statement by saying that there was a sufficient demand made by the use of cotton seed in making oleo oil, and the price for the seed thus used was sufficiently high to raise the level of the price of the whole cotton-seed product of the South; that effect was not limited to the amount of seed used in the oil business, but extended to the whole product.

Speaking upon this same subject, another witness before the committee, Mr. Bond, said that the price paid for the seed used in the manufacture of oleo oil went far toward settling the price of the whole cotton-seed product of the South. That is but another way of stating a principle axiomatic in commerce, that the price of the surplus of an article fixes the price of the whole article. It is not the quantity used, but the high price paid and the fact that the market is sufficiently large to raise the price of the whole product to a certain level.

Mr. HARRIS. Just in that connection, I should be very glad if the Senator from North Carolina would state of what importance the use of cotton-seed oil as a substitute for olive oil would be in this relation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not prepared to answer the Senator as to that, for I know nothing about olive oil. I have never studied that question.

Mr. HARRIS. It would affect the California olive-oil product.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sorry that I am not prepared to give any information to the Senator on that subject, but I do not possess it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is on the question affecting cotton-seed oil.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; it is germane, and I should like to answer the Senator's question, but I can not. I am not familiar with the uses and constituent elements of olive oil.

The advocates of this bill ridicule the idea that the interests of the growers of beef cattle and hogs will be seriously affected by it, and yet, Mr. President, we find the representatives of this interest from one end of the country to the other greatly stirred up over this legislation. They too have sent representatives before your committee to protest in most vigorous terms.

Associations representing these interests have passed vigorous resolutions of protest against it. I wish to present now the resolutions passed at a meeting of the National Live Stock Association, which met in Chicago last December. There were some 1,500 delegates in this convention, and about 130 branch organizations, scattered all over the country, were represented. The resolutions, which I will not read in full but ask permission to insert in my remarks, were adopted by the unanimous vote of this convention, and, I take it, embody the honest convictions of this body as to the effect of this legislation upon the live-stock interest of the country, all of which was represented except the dairy interest.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the fifth annual convention of the National Live Stock Association, held in Chicago, Ill., December 3, 4, 5, 6, 1901:

"Whereas the National Live Stock Association has heretofore announced itself as unalterably opposed to that class of legislation which builds up one industry at the expense of another equally as meritorious, and has opposed the passage of the bill for a law known as the Grout bill, which certain dairy interests sought to have passed by the last Congress of the United States, but which failed to reach a vote; and

"Whereas unofficial notice has been served upon the officers of this association that this same measure will be reintroduced in the coming session of Congress and forced to an issue; and

"Whereas the openly expressed intention of the movers of this law is to destroy the manufacture of oleomargarine, a product of the packing house, which has been declared by Government authorities to be a pure food product as wholesome and healthful as butter; and

"Whereas the stockmen of the United States believe that this product should be sold upon its own merits, and favor any legislation that will prevent or compel the manufacturers to sell their product for just what it is, a substitute for butter, but draw the line on legislation that would unjustly hamper the industry by compelling the manufacturers to offer their product in a form that would make it offensive to the eye of the consumer, and consequently unpalatable; and

"Whereas the so-called 'Wadsworth' substitute for the Grout bill, offered in the last Congress, which provides that the oleomargarine product be only offered for sale in 1 and 2 pound packages, each package labeled in plain letters, meets with the approval of the members of this association: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the National Live Stock Association, in convention assembled, representing more than four billions of invested capital, reiterates its former expressed disapproval of such class legislation as the old Grout bill, and we protest against the passage of any law of this nature, firmly believing that such legislation is unjust, unconstitutional, and unfair, and not to be tolerated in a free country.

"Resolved, That we heartily approve of such legislation as the law proposed by the Wadsworth substitute in the last Congress, and we approve any legislation which, in a legitimate manner, compels manufacturers to offer their products for sale for just what they are.

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the position taken by Hon. J. W. WADSWORTH, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture in the last Congress, and believe that in justice to him he should be retained as chairman of that committee in the present Congress. The thanks of this convention are due and are hereby tendered to Senators MONEY, of Mississippi; HEITFIELD, of Idaho; WARREN, of Wyoming, and BATE, of Tennessee, members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, for their able and successful opposition to the passage of the Grout bill during the closing session of the last Congress.

"Resolved, That the executive committee of this association be instructed to forward copies of these resolutions to Congress, and to take such action as it may think necessary and proper to oppose the passage of any bill containing such provisions as the so-called Grout bill."

Attest:

JOHN W. SPRINGER, President.
CHAS. F. MARTIN, Secretary.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator the purport of those resolutions?

Mr. SIMMONS. The general purport of those resolutions is condemnatory of this bill, and that this class of legislation is injurious to the interests of the stock growers.

It is positively asserted, not only by the breeders of beef cattle, but by dealers in beef cattle, that the use of oleo oil, made from the caul fat of steers, in oleomargarine has increased the value of this class of cattle from $2 to $3 a head, and by dealers in hogs that the use of the leaf fat of the hog in oleomargarine has increased the value of the hog 20 cents a head. In support of this contention they show that caul fat for use in oleomargarine brings 10 cents a pound, while for use in tallow it brings only 6 cents a pound; that leaf fat used in oleomargarine sells for 8½ cents a pound, while for lard it sells for only 6 cents a pound, and that the demand for these products for this purpose is sufficiently large to fix the price of the whole product, and that thus the value of caul fat and leaf fat has been raised, respectively, from 6 to 10 cents and from 6 to 8½ cents a pound.

Mr. John C. McCoy, a Western farmer and stock raiser, as well as commission merchant for the sale of cattle, appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry against this bill in the Fifty-sixth Congress, and I wish to present a part of his statements, giving statistics showing the effect of the passage of this measure upon the live-stock interests of the country:

Mr. McCoy. The average beef steer contains about 50 pounds of caul fat, and the average hog about 8 pounds of leaf fat. The market price to-day for caul fat for oleomargarine purposes is about 10 cents per pound, while tallow is worth about 6 cents; and the leaf fat for oleomargarine purposes 8½ cents per pound, and for lard only 6 cents. Those are very close approximate values.

There has been slaughtered in Kansas City since January 1, 1900, to date over 1,000,000 cattle, producing approximately 50,000,000 pounds of oleo oil, worth to-day for oleomargarine purposes 10 cents per pound, or $5,000,000. Were it not for the demand the manufacture of oleomargarine has created for oleo oil, this product would have been sold for tallow at 6 cents per pound, netting $3,000,000, a difference of $2,000,000, or $2 per head for each animal slaughtered.

During the period just mentioned there were slaughtered at Kansas City approximately 3,000,000 hogs, producing about 24,000,000 pounds of leaf fat, worth for oleomargarine purposes, at 8½ cents per pound, $2,040,000. The demand for this product as an oleomargarine ingredient removed, it would have been sold for lard at 6 cents per pound, or $1,440,000, a difference of $600,000, or 20 cents per head for each hog slaughtered.

Had it not been possible to use these two products for oleomargarine purposes instead of tallow and lard, it would have cost the farmer marketing their stock at Kansas City this year $2,600,000. The same is true at all the principal live-stock markets in proportion to their receipts. The five large Western markets—Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, St. Joseph—have handled since January 1, 1900, to date, 6,500,000 cattle and 16,300,000 hogs. Of that number at least 75 per cent of the cattle, or 4,875, were slaughtered, and practically all of the hogs. A difference of $2 per head on the cattle and 20 cents per head on the hogs would mean a loss to the Western farmers on their marketing of cattle and hogs for the year 1900 of $13,000,000.

But, gentlemen, carry the reasoning still further. The Government report shows that on January 1, 1900, there were in the United States 27,610,000 cattle other than milch cows, or cattle available sooner or later for beef. A depreciation of $2 per head on them would mean $55,230,000. The same authority gives the number of hogs in the United States on January 1, 1899, approximately, 88,650,000.

THE CHAIRMAN. Would it reduce the value of the milch cow to have the manufacture of oleomargarine stopped? I thought you included all the cattle.

MR. MCCOY. No, sir; I included only the cattle other than milch cows. The Government makes a distinction. It would reduce the value of the milch cow, because the ultimate destination of all cattle is the block. Milch cows are used for a long time for milk purposes, but unless they should happen to die of old age, which the farmer generally sees is not the case, the ultimate destination of the milch cow is the block.

MR. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

MR. SIMMONS. Yes, sir.

MR. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he does not recollect the testimony of Mr. Hobbs, who represented the opposition to this bill before the committee—he stated that the total number of cattle slaughtered in this country was about 11,000,000—and if, taking the total amount of oleo oil used in oleomargarine, the figures would not show that the amount was not over 25 cents and a fraction per head.

MR. SIMMONS. I do not remember that statement.

MR. PROCTOR. The Senator will find that the totals that were submitted to the committee figured about 25 cents per head.

MR. SIMMONS. I do not remember to have heard that. I do not dispute that he made the statement which the Senator has quoted.

But there is not only the testimony of Mr. McCoy, but the great preponderance of testimony, nearly all of the testimony in fact taken by the committee, tended to show that the depreciation in the value of beef cattle as the result of this legislation would be from two to three dollars per head. I think the National Live Stock Association so asserted in their resolutions.

Of course I do not know whether or not these statements are true; but I know they come from men who are engaged in the business of raising and selling cattle and hogs. They are supposed to know something about the effect of this legislation—not its future effect, for they are not speaking about that, but its past effect upon their product—and I am willing to take their statement as at least approximating the truth in this matter.

Not only the cotton-seed-oil interests and live-stock interests, but the labor organizations, have sent representatives here. Mr. Patrick Dolan, president of the United Mine Workers' Association, and another gentleman, Mr. John Pierce, representing the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, appeared here in the interest of the tens of thousands of laborers belonging to these great labor organizations. Let me read two short extracts from the statements of these two labor leaders. First I read from the statement of President Dolan, as follows:

Our people, Mr. Chairman, are against the passage of the measure. I represent over 40,000 miners and their families, and I know from the sentiment in other sections of the country to which I go, from talking to people who are interested in our organization, that they do not want to be deprived of the ability to purchase this wholesome article of food. If it is not made in a wholesome way, then they do not want it; but if it is just as good to them to spread their bread with as 35-cent butter, they do want it. And if this measure passes, the chances are that butter will go up to 50 cents, and poor people will not be able to purchase it at all.

Now, let me read from the statement of Mr. Pierce:

The interest of the consumer seems not to have been considered at all, the sole idea apparently being that the creameryman and dairyman should have a monopoly of the entire market for their wares, by rendering a competing product so unattractive that nobody would care to purchase it. Do you think that all the workmen of western Pennsylvania or of these United States (a portion of whom I represent in the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers) can afford to pay 35 cents per pound for creamery butter, which is the present price for the first-class article in Pittsburgh? Everyone, I think, will admit that all can not.

If this bill passes, what position are we in? On examination we find that we will have three options, viz, (1) creamery butter at 35 cents, if the conditions are no worse, and I am not sure but that the passage of this bill may make it 50 cents per pound; (2) colored oleo at 25 cents per pound, on account of the 10-cent tax; (3) white oleo at 15 cents.

Colored oleomargarine is at present retailed at from 12½ to 20 cents per pound. On investigation I am satisfied that most of our people are paying about 15 cents per pound for it, and I can not admit that those who buy it can afford to pay more. I therefore arrive at the conclusion that they must either find 10 cents per pound more to pay this proposed robbery—for I can not dignify it by the name of tax—or buy and eat white oleomargarine. And this to satisfy the greed of the manufacturers of butter, who think that white oleomargarine is good enough for those who can not afford to pay 10 cents additional for yellow, or the 20 cents or more additional for creamery butter, or use the off grades of butter now unsalable as food.

But, Mr. President, in answer to these petitions and resolutions and representations of the mill men and farmers and stock growers, we are told that there is very little oleomargarine manufactured and sold in this country, and that these interests will be but slightly affected by the destruction of this industry. It is true there is not a very great amount of oleomargarine manufactured now; only a little over 100,000,000 pounds a year.

And yet the amount of oleomargarine consumed in some of the States of this Union where there has been no hostile legislation, such as Rhode Island, for illustration, where 8 pounds per capita is consumed a year, shows conclusively that if this industry were encouraged instead of handicapped that we would be producing and selling in this country to-day probably half as much oleomargarine as we are selling butter; and but for the prejudice that has been created against it by agitation and misrepresentation in the interest of the dairy we would probably be manufacturing and using as much per capita in this country as they use per capita in Denmark. And upon that basis, instead of a demand in this country for 100,000,000 pounds, there would be a demand for at least 1,300,000,000 pounds.

If the comparatively small amount of cotton seed and the comparatively small amount of oleo oil and neutral oil used in the manufacture of 100,000,000 pounds now used is a source of benefit to the cattle farmer and hog raiser, as they all unite in saying there is, how much greater would be the profits and how much greater would be the demands for these farm products if this industry had been unfettered and allowed to expand to the proportions to which it would undoubtedly have attained but for this adverse legislation and agitation. In considering the effect of prospective legislation upon an industry, it is not fair, nor is it the American way, to look only at its condition when fettered and hampered by adverse environments, but also to look to what would be and will be its state if protected by fair and just laws.

Mr. President, there is another interest in this country affected by this legislation which is more entitled to the consideration of Congress than the interest of the farmer, or the manufacturer of oil, or the raiser of beef, and that is the great army of consumers in this country. They are mostly poor people; they are laboring people; they work on the farms; they work in the factories; they work in the mines, and they can not afford to pay high prices for the products which they consume.

In oleomargarine they have found a cheap article which, since they have come to learn that it is a healthy article, a nutritious article, is entirely satisfactory to them. They buy it; they use it extensively, and they can afford to pay the price for which it is sold; but they can not afford to pay the high prices of dairy butter. Much less can they afford, after this legislation goes into effect, which will drive oleomargarine from the market, and make a scarce market, and therefore a high-price market, to buy dairy butter at the high price to which it will go, for I believe, and the laboring people believe, and they state that belief in the memorials to which I have just referred, that in their opinion the result of this legislation will be to put the price of dairy butter up to 40 or 50 cents a pound. Then they will not be able to buy it at all.

These laboring people, as well as all other consumers of butter or any of its substitutes, are entitled to consideration in connection with this question. With oleomargarine out of the way we will have to look solely and exclusively to the cow for butter.

It is sheer nonsense to talk about the capacity of the cows of this country to supply unaided a cheap butter. There are not enough milk cows now to do it, and there will not be in a reasonable time enough to do it. There are only about 17,000,000 milk cows in the United States, and there are between seventy-five and eighty millions of people to be supplied. Strike down oleomargarine and you will do a great thing for the great trusts that now control the dairy interests of the country. It will give them the finest market in the world free and without competition. The rich will have to pay a little more for their butter, but they will be able to get what they want. The poor man will either have to pay more for his butter than he can afford to pay or he will have to go without it.

But, Mr. President, there is another ground upon which we who oppose this bill base our opposition to it, higher than that of the pecuniary interest of the producers of either butter or oleomargarine or the products out of which they are made. It is opposition to special legislation. This bill is special legislation of the most dangerous character. It has long been the custom in this country to use the taxing power of the Government to protect the products of home industries against the productions of foreign countries. The right or wrong of this I do not now propose to discuss, but this is the first time in our history that it has been proposed, deliberately proposed, to use the taxing power of the Government to build up one home interest by pulling down another.

If you start upon this legislation, where are you going to end? There was introduced in the House of Representatives the other day a bill which proposes to brand and mark an article of commerce known as shoddy. Shoddy is a material made largely from cotton goods, but in imitation of wool. There is but a small modicum of wool in it, but it looks like wool; it feels like wool; it is bought and worn as wool by poor people; but they know it is not wool because of the difference in price between these shoddy goods and genuine wool. Yet it is proposed now to brand and mark that in the interests of wool.

I know the bill to which I have referred was introduced by an opponent of the pending bill, as I am, but by a man impregnated with this idea of class legislation, as I am not. I think the bill obnoxious in a large measure to the same objections which should obtain against the the pending measure. It is not proposed in that bill to tax shoddy, but what will be the next step? The next step in the evolution of this scheme and system of legislation would lead to the taxing of shoddy for what? In the interest of the sheep, just as it is proposed here to tax oleomargarine in the interest of the cow.

There is another imitation product in this country sold as silk. It is a very common article made in imitation of genuine silk. I do not know exactly the materials which are in it, but there is very little silk in it. Yet under the skillful manipulation of the adulterants of clothing it has been wrought in imitation of silk. You can not easily tell it from silk. Poor people buy it and wear it because it is cheap and because it looks like silk, and nobody except an expert can tell it is not the silk which the rich lady wears. Under the theory of this bill there is no reason why that product should not be taxed out of existence, and it would be, I suppose, if there was much silk grown and manufactured in this country.

There is a long train of similar articles that could be brought under the ban of this same class of legislation and taxed to death in the interest of some other article which it resembles called the genuine article.

If we enter upon this species of legislation, Mr. President, we shall soon have established here in America a system of internal tariff taxation very much akin to that which we now have upon our statute books applying to foreign trade, and we shall have, first, one product taxed in the interest of another and for the protection of another; then we shall have the products of one section taxed in the interest and for the protection of the products of another section; and, finally, we shall have Congress exercising its powers and its functions under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution in order to give the States, as it is proposed now to give them in this bill, a free hand to legislate independently of the protection of that clause against the interests of other States, and we shall have here in this country that very condition of State discrimination and State exclusion that played such an important figure in the original formation of the Government under which we live.

Mr. President, there are other features of this matter which I should like to discuss and which I intended to discuss, but I shall not trespass any further upon the patience of the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I have been very much interested, as I have no doubt all have been who have listened to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in his able discussion of this question. I only desire at this time to refer to one or two minor points. One is the matter of the live-stock interests in the manufacture of oleomargarine. It is very easy for men interested in live stock to make the offhand statement that it would entail a loss of two or three dollars a head if this bill should be enacted into law. It is true, as the Senator from North Carolina states, that representatives of the live-stock industry did make such statements in a hearing held a year ago this winter—I do not recollect any such statements this winter—but, the figures show how that is.

Mr. John F. Hobbs, the editor of the National Provisioner, of New York, a man whose opinion doubtless is as accurate as any man's can be in the absence of statistics which would show exactly, was before the committee in the interest of the live-stock people. He has been the manager of the opposition to this measure, and has carried on largely the correspondence with the opponents of the measure—the oleomargarine manufacturers. He gives the total number of cattle slaughtered in this country annually at 11,000,000 head. The total amount, according to the census bulletin, of oleo oil used in manufactures in this country is $3,744,235 worth, but it is not all used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. It appeared before the committee that some of it was used for other purposes, the manufacture of soap, for instance; but admitting for the sake of argument that every dollar of it is used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and figuring out the result, it gives 24 cents 9.4 mills, a fraction under 25 cents, as the total amount of oleo oil used per head of cattle.

I wish to make one other statement. The Senator from North Carolina speaks—and I agree with him in that—of process and renovated and adulterated butter. His suggestions in that regard differ from those of other Senators who favor this bill, and I agree with the Senator that this measure should deal impartially with all those products. I think he will find, if the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] is adopted, that it does deal impartially and fairly with all adulterations and mixtures of butter that pass as butter, and that he will find when the measure is perfected by that amendment that it is in effect, so far as butter is concerned, a pure-food bill and a class of legislation that is certainly just and right and demanded by the people.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. How much does the Senator from Vermont think the cattle raisers get out of the profits of the beef combine from the by-products of the cattle? In other words, how much does it affect the price?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think that is a question that could be better answered by the great purchasers and raisers of live stock themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL obtained the floor.

Mr. HEITFELD. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEITFELD. How much does the tariff on hides bring the owner of cattle?

Mr. SPOONER. I will answer that question just as the Senator from Vermont answered my question—I do not know; but I have had a very grave suspicion that it did not make very much difference.

Mr. HEITFELD. Still, it was contended here during the tariff debate that the tariff was placed on hides in the interest of the cattle raiser.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Vermont, I should like to ask if it is the intention of the Senator or of the committee to support or accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]?

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say to the Senator that it is.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I do not rise to make any extended remarks on this bill. I do desire to say, however, that I favor this scheme of legislation. I am in favor of the passage of this bill as reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and I rise now for the simple purpose—because I think it is in line just at this point in the debate—of contributing, for the information of the Senate and of the country, an article published in the New York Herald of last Friday on the subject of the beef trust.

It seems to be admitted here that those engaged in that industry are severely hostile to this piece of legislation; that they are fighting it from every conceivable standpoint, because, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests to me, they make the product of oleomargarine and imagine that this proposed legislation is going to interfere somewhat with their business. As bearing, however, upon that question and as an answer to the resolutions which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said a few moments ago had been adopted by the live stock men at Chicago, I desire to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the article to which I have attracted attention.

The price of beef it seems to me has advanced all over the country to the consumer very largely in the last few months. It has been very noticeably so. It has advanced 2 or 3 cents a pound. The beef trust I am advised are coining their millions out of this industry. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks this article in the New York Herald. I do not pretend to vouch for the truth of all the statements contained in this article. I do pretend, however, to vouch for the truth of the statement that the New York Herald is one of our great metropolitan papers, and I believe no paper in the country stands any higher or receives more universal approval in its statements generally than does the New York Herald. It is all that I desire to say, and if I can have unanimous consent to insert this article, and the whole of it, I shall be obliged to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CULLOM. Have it read.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is too long.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator from Oregon takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question, with his permission.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. It requires that I should make a brief statement before I submit the question. I do not suggest this as a jest. I should premise it, however, by stating that the Senator represents a constituency largely interested in the canning of salmon.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a fact.

Mr. BACON. I saw in the papers a year or two ago that a company had been organized somewhere on the Mississippi River—the Upper Mississippi, I believe—the business of which was to be the catching of catfish, coloring the catfish in semblance of salmon, canning it, and selling it as salmon. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he would favor a tax of 10 per cent on that industry in order to protect the salmon industry of Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose they are cooked in cotton-seed oil.

Mr. BACON. That may be; but I am not on cotton-seed oil now; I am on colored catfish. I desire to ask the Senator whether in the prosecution of this same idea he would desire to have the catfish industry taxed to the extent of 10 cents a pound in order to protect the Oregon salmon industry?

Mr. MITCHELL. When the Senator from Georgia is in earnest—

Mr. BACON. I certainly am.

Mr. MITCHELL. We always pay the greatest respect to him, but when he gets funny—

Mr. BACON. I do state with the utmost sincerity that there has been such a statement published. Whether true or not, I do not know. The Senator is quoting a newspaper, and I simply vouch for the fact that I saw such a statement in the newspapers, as the Senator vouches for the fact that he sees this article in the Herald.

Mr. SPOONER. It was a joke.

Mr. BACON. It was not supposed to be. I wish to test the sincerity of the position the Senator from Oregon occupies. I want to know whether in such a case, not limiting it to the butter industry, the Senator is in favor of taxing such a spurious product in order to protect the salmon industry of the Pacific coast, and also in all other similar cases, or whether he wishes to limit it to this particular one.

Mr. MITCHELL. The question of the salmon industry is not now before the Senate. When there comes before the Senate a proposition to tax something in connection with the salmon industry, then I will talk about it with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Then I will ask the Senator this question, with his permission: Whether he is in favor of extending legislation of this kind to all other industries which are manufacturing articles in competition with some other articles, in order that the genuine article may be protected at the expense of the spurious article?

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be time enough for me to answer that question when a proposition comes before the Senate to tax some other industry. The only question before the Senate now is in reference to oleomargarine.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is not prepared to say that if the same facts exist—

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not necessary for me to say it. It is not necessary even to answer the fish story of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. It is not a question of necessity—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is not under any necessity to answer anything; but possibly there might be a consistency in his supporting all legislation of this kind under similar circumstances and an inconsistency in limiting it to this particular case, and I simply desired to know whether the honorable Senator intended to be consistent or inconsistent. It is not necessary that he should answer it. We would be very much edified, however, if he would give us an answer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I always aim to be consistent, and whenever any measure comes up here I will endeavor to act in such a way that I will not be open to the charge of inconsistency. As I said before, I do not vouch for the truth of every statement contained in the article, but we all know that the New York Herald is a cosmopolitan paper which stands along at the head of the list, and when statements such as are contained in this article are made in a paper like that, bearing so intimately and directly upon the question now under consideration by the Senate, I thought it was nothing more than proper and right, or at least permissible, to use no stronger term, to have them brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all I have to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

BEEF TRUST SQUEEZES POOR FOR $100,000,000—CAPACITY OF THE CHICAGO COMBINATION SHOWN BY THE LATEST ADVANCE IN PRICES—HUNGRY GO HUNGRIER; MEAT MADE A LUXURY—RECEIPTS OF FOUR CONCERNS REACH MORE THAN A HALF BILLION A YEAR—HOME INDUSTRY IS KILLED—LOCAL SLAUGHTERERS AND RETAILERS MUST BOW TO THE WILL OF THE WEST—NEW YORK'S SUPPLY REGULATED—HOW MUCH THIS CITY SHALL CONSUME IS DECIDED ON IN ADVANCE TO A POUND—BEEF TRUST'S TRADE HALF A BILLION A YEAR.

Annual trade controlled by the beef trust..... $600,000,000

Annual business handled by the leading members of the combination:

Swift & Co.....	200,000,000
Armour & Co.....	190,000,000
Nelson Morris & Co.....	95,000,000
G. H. Hammond & Co.....	75,000,000

Business controlled by four packing-house firms in the beef trust..... 560,000,000

Absolutely controlling trade aggregating $600,000,000 annually, the unofficial combination of interests known as the beef trust has succeeded, after many years of organization and expansion, in so completely dominating the provision markets of the United States that independent competition is killed. The strategic policy of the beef trust has become steadily more despotic and aggressive, until wholesale and retail butchers in New York and other cities who will not sign the ironclad agreement of the Chicago combination are driven out of business by scores, both by being cut off from supplies and being openly undersold by agencies especially established for the purpose of crushing competition.

The latest "squeeze" engineered by orders from the pooled interests of the houses forming the trust is the boldest on record, and the middlemen and consuming population of New York have been forced to pay, within the last week, advances on prices already abnormally high of from 3 to 4 cents for beef, mutton, and pork. There has been a similar rise in other cities, until the increased profits of the beef trust over the scale of 1901 are conservatively estimated at $100,000,000.

The recent movement makes fresh meat an almost prohibitive luxury to thousands of families in this city.

It is within the power of the beef trust to order another advance and pocket another $100,000,000 with the mere labor of telegraphing the new schedule to their agents in every city and town in the United States.

Of the $600,000,000 of yearly business, $560,000,000 is handled by only four firms, who cooperate to the smallest details of regulating supply and demand from the stockyards to the retail markets. These are Armour & Co., Swift & Co., G. H. Hammond & Co., and Nelson A. Morris & Co. Their recent action in "skying" prices has aroused murmurs of open rebellion from New York meat dealers, but the beef trust employs a staff of experts whose business it is to whip the recalcitrant dealers back into line—to make them submit or be driven out of business.

DO NOT BID AGAINST EACH OTHER.

The combination to restrict trade in any kind of meats begins in the extensive stockyards of Chicago, St. Louis, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Omaha, and St. Paul. In these live-stock centers the cattle buyers for the houses of Armour, Swift, Morris, and Hammond never "cross bid" each other. If one of Armour's men sees an agent from Swift's bidding on one lot he does not interfere, but leaves the seller to take the price offered or keep his stock. If shipments are light or from any cause stock is scarce enough to cause a natural advance in the stockyard market, the trust agents avoid all purchases until the sellers are forced to come to their terms. Whenever independent buyers show pernicious activity, the beef-trust men, by united action and understanding, sweep the yards clean of stock to bar out competition and advance prices. Because of the lack of organized system the opposition can not market its purchases at these inflated prices. It must yield to the combination or quit business.

Having disposed of all competition on the hoof in the great cattle centers of the West, the trust next obtains from the railroads rebates which "squeeze" any possible rivals out of the competition in the cost of freight transportation. Products are, therefore, placed at any point in the country to be sold if necessary at prices which can not be met and fought in the local markets by dealers who kill their beef in their own countryside.

This system of underselling has been the club with which local slaughterers have been smashed right and left. These, together with the wholesale butchers and the feeding and fattening industry, which used to be the most profitable branch of small farming, are being rapidly driven out of existence. These men are now forced to work for or buy of the trust, or look elsewhere for a livelihood.

When the markets are reached the operation of the combination's system has been as follows: The wholesale butchers were asked to sell the trust products on commission, instead of buying from the farmers. Every dealer won over to the commission basis bagged two birds with one stone by removing a healthy competitor and compelling the farmer to find another market for his stock.

When the dealer declined to be won over the trust promptly opened an agency in his territory and pushed Western beef at prices suicidal to the opposition, which had to surrender for lack of resources. This warfare was carried the length and breadth of the United States, and then the field was ready for the next step.

INDEPENDENCE CRUSHED.

The commission merchants had a shred of independence left, and this must be taken from them. So they were forced to give up selling the meat products on commission and accept salaries as agents for one of the packing houses merged in the beef trust. If they refused, hostilities were revived by again opening agencies in the locality and selling at prices ruinous to the merchant. It is only a question of a very short time, under this system, before the salary proposition is accepted, and by the system the branch houses of the trust have been multiplied throughout the country.

This policy has been kept steadily in view since the organization of the great packing-house combination about twenty-five years ago.

A later development of the crusade was the establishment in large cities of local slaughterhouses, whose management is veiled behind firm names of their former proprietors.

REVOLT IN THE HUDSON VALLEY.

Light is thrown on the working of this system by the first organized protest against the jump in prices of the last week, which is voiced not by the dealers of New York, but the butchers of Fishkill Landing and Matteawan, who are up in arms against the beef trust as a measure of business life and death.

A meeting was held yesterday in which they decided that they must somehow fortify themselves against the torrent of high prices which, they said, was "sweeping them off the earth."

All the dealers in these localities must buy their meats of the Armour, Morris, or Swift companies, which have large cold-storage houses across the river at Newburgh. Coupled with the most prohibitive prices is the enforcement of the rule compelling them to make weekly cash settlements, under the penalty of refusal by the agencies to let them have a pound of meat. These dealers took no alarm when last week an advance of 1 cent a pound, wholesale, was made by the trust. Another advance, yesterday, to a 10-cent average rate per pound caused them to organize in self-defense.

SQUEEZING THE CONSUMER.

They decided to raise retail prices from 2 to 3 cents a pound and to give no customer credit for more than a week. If payment was delayed, the patron would not be allowed to buy meat at any shop in the town. This was a putting into operation of the methods of the beef trust on a retail scale. Before the trust invaded the Hudson River Valley, beef was sold wholesale at 7 cents a pound, and the retail dealers were able to command the prices they now have to ask because of the recent advances. Beef is higher in this region than was ever before recorded. The farmers can do almost nothing to ease the situation, because the trust has driven all the local slaughterhouses out of business.

In Jersey City alone 17 retail meat dealers have been compelled to close their shops, all forced to the wall by the packing-house branches in the town. The most despotic branch of the machinery and the part of the system which shows most impressively the complete interaction of the combination of interests has been devised for the purpose of keeping under control the army of dealers who must buy all their meat provisions from the trust houses. This is a "clearing-house" system, by which the entire trade, controlled by the combination in New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, is kept under daily and almost hourly supervision.

This "arbitration office" is maintained pro rata by the packing houses, which work under an agreement, with penalties of fines and forfeitures strictly enforced. The management of this central office has free access and makes visits at unexpected hours to all the books and workings of the branches of the different members of the beef trust.

BLACKLIST IN OPERATION.

No butcher is allowed more than a week's credit, and failure to comply with the agreement means that he is "blacklisted" in every branch controlled by the trust.

The trust agreement under which this "clearing house" is operated is so jealously guarded that every agent in possession of one is held personally responsible for its secrecy. Rather than submit it to the test of the courts and risk an examination of the "blacklisting" system, there have been repeated instances of exasperated customers who, refusing to pay little bills they believed unjust, were not even threatened with proceedings.

NEW YORK'S SUPPLY REGULATED.

The supply of meat allowed New York by the grace of the trust is regulated in this central office.

Each member of the combination is allotted a certain number of carloads to be shipped from the West each week to a tabulated list of cities and towns in the East. If for any reason trade is dull in New York, a certain number of cars is cut out for the week following and some of those on the way held back or switched to other points to keep prices up in this market. In the arbitration office prices are fixed a week ahead, and instructions accordingly given to the managers of the branch houses. No cars can be unloaded nor a pound of meat sold unless these daily instructions are followed to the letter.

The sales and credit standing of every dealer compelled to buy of a trust concern are regularly reported to the "clearing house," and are open for consultation by any of its affiliated houses. It is useless for him to transfer his account from Armour to Swift or from Morris to Hammond, no matter if he has been ill used, or is, perhaps, the victim of a clerical error. There are no disputes, because the verdict of the central office is final and absolute. Such facts as these sufficiently demonstrate the existence of the beef trust, combining every essential element of a combination effected to restrain trade and crush natural competition.

ADVANCES IN PRICES OF MEAT HAVE NETTED TRUST $100,000,000.

Advances in prices ordered by the beef trust to "squeeze" the retailer and consumer within one year:

WHOLESALE.

	1901.	1902.
	Cents.	Cents.
Dressed beef, per pound	6½	9½
Lamb, per pound	8	11½
Mutton, per pound	8	11
Veal, per pound	8	13
Pork, per pound	6	9

RETAIL.

Sirloin steak, per pound	16	20
Porterhouse steak, per pound	20	22
Round steak, per pound	16	18
Mutton, per pound	12	14
Lamb, per pound	12	15

Estimated profits divided among members of the beef trust out of the arbitrary advance in prices during 1901-1902, $100,000,000.

While there has been an increase of from 2 to 4 cents a pound in the face of prices already abnormally high, American meats are being sold in Europe by the beef trust at prices much lower than in the United States. Yet the agents of the beef trust claim that the unprecedented price advances are caused by a scarcity of live stock in the West.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the discussions of the bill under consideration. I have devoted considerable time to an examination of the testimony taken by the Committee on Agriculture during the investigation conducted by it last year, which makes a volume of nearly 900 pages, and a record of the investigation made by the House and Senate committees also during the present session of Congress, and the impression has come to me with great force that the question presented by the pending bill is one which has aroused the interest of the whole country, and is perhaps affecting a greater number of people directly or indirectly than any other question which has been considered at this session.

The main feature of this measure, as I understand it, is the reduction of the tax on oleomargarine in its natural state from 2 cents a pound to one-fourth of 1 cent a pound and the increase of the tax provided by the act of 1886 from 2 cents a pound to 10 cents a pound upon that portion of oleomargarine which is colored in imitation of butter.

The agitation of this question has excited the interest of three classes of people in this country. The record to which I have referred shows that the producers of oleomargarine have appeared before the committees by attorneys, by agents, by witnesses. The great agricultural interests have been in like manner represented, and we have before us the record of the anti-color laws now in force in 32 of the States, representing the opinions of 80 per cent of the inhabitants of the nation.

It is not necessary to discuss the magnitude of the agricultural industry. That has already been done. Nor is it necessary that I should discuss in detail the growth of the oleomargarine industry. It is enough to say that within the last twenty years it has assumed proportions and forms that have attracted universal interest.

Now, sir, I stand here to say that when oleomargarine is presented to this country as oleomargarine, when it is put upon sale as and for what it really is, I am heartily in favor of giving it a free field and an opportunity for a fair fight. I am of the opinion that the American people are entitled to choose what they shall eat and what they shall drink so long as the articles selected are wholesome and do not endanger health; but when an article is placed upon the market under a false color, in a false guise, intended to deceive, and which does deceive, then it is that the consumers have a vital interest in the matter and they have the right to come and claim legislation which shall protect them against deception and fraud.

When oleomargarine was first placed upon the market in this country, it is true, as suggested by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that there was a time when the production and sale of oleomargarine was believed to be against public policy and the use of it dangerous to the health of the people, because of the action of unprincipled producers, who, it was alleged, employed unwholesome materials in its preparation. There is no question but that the prejudice was well founded, as is well evinced by a remark in President Cleveland's message sent to the Congress of the United States at the time of the adoption of the law of 1886. He said:

Nor should there be opposition to the incidental effect of this legislation on the part of those who profess to be engaged honestly and fairly in the manufacture and sale of a wholesome and valuable article of food which by its provisions may be subject to taxation. As long as their business is carried on under cover and by false pretenses such men have bad companions in those whose manufactures, however vile and harmful, take their place without challenge with the better sort in a common crusade of deceit against the public. But if this occupation and its methods are forced into the light and all these manufactures must thus either stand upon their merits or fall, the good and bad must soon part company and the fittest only will survive.

What President Cleveland prophesied has come to pass, and to-day, I apprehend, under the influence of the law of 1886, there is such a supervision of the manufacture of oleomargarine that what its friends claim for it as to the wholesomeness of materials and cleanliness in preparation is practically true. The State laws adopted during that period of its history prohibited to a very large extent the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine in any form. In several instances they were held to be unconstitutional. At a later period legislation, intended to apprise the purchaser of the character of the article, was adopted requiring that oleomargarine offered for sale should be colored pink. This law was also held to be unconstitutional as prohibitive in its character in a case that came up to the Supreme Court from the State of New Hampshire. But in 1891 the legislature of Massachusetts enacted a statute which forbade the sale of oleomargarine in that State when it was made in imitation of yellow butter. Its constitutionality was tested in the courts of that State and later, by appeal, in the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Plumley case, by which court the statute was held to be valid, one that the State had a right to enact, one that it could put in operation, one that tended to protect the people from the imposition of having that which was not butter sold under the guise of butter, whereby the great public was defrauded.

Other States have followed in the lead of Massachusetts in adopting what are known as anticolor laws until 32 of them now have such statutes in force. These statutes represent 60,000,000 of people, 80 per cent of the entire population of the United States.

The danger to the people believed to exist through the introduction of oleomargarine was brought to the attention of Congress, and in 1886 a bill was introduced in the House providing for a tax of 10 cents a pound upon that article; but as the discussion proceeded the rate was reduced from 10 cents to 5 cents. The bill passed the House and came to the Senate, where the rate of taxation was still further reduced from 5 cents to 2 cents, and the bill became a law.

The same opposition was brought to bear against the passage of that bill that is brought to bear against the pending measure. The same classes appeared against it. The same arguments were urged against its passage, and we find again, referring to President Cleveland's message, that he had become aware of the impending danger and was fully in sympathy with legislation which should protect the people against imposition. He said:

Not the least important incident related to this legislation is the defense afforded to the consumer against the fraudulent substitution and sale of an imitation for a genuine article of food of very general household use. Notwithstanding the immense quantity of the article described in this bill which is sold to the people for their consumption as food, and notwithstanding the claim made that its manufacture supplies a cheap substitute for butter, I venture to say that hardly a pound ever entered a poor man's house under its real name and in its true character.

That was the opinion of the President of the United States at that time. He goes further than that and says:

While in its relation to an article of this description there should be no governmental regulation of what the citizen shall eat, it is certainly not a cause of regret if by legislation of this character he is afforded a means by which he may better protect himself against imposition in meeting the needs and wants of his daily life.

Some question has been raised in this debate as to the right of the Government to tax colored oleomargarine in the manner provided in this bill. I do not know that anybody has ever directly raised the question of the constitutionality of the law of 1886 just referred to in any case which has gone to the Supreme Court of the United States for final adjudication, and the proposed law is simply an amendment of the law of 1886, reducing the tax on uncolored oleomargarine and increasing it on that which has been colored in semblance of butter. The nearest approach of the court to that question that has come to my knowledge is contained in the case of In re Kollock, in which the Supreme Court uses this language:

The act is on its face an act for levying taxes and, although it may operate in so doing to prevent deception in the sale of oleomargarine as and for butter, its primary object must be assumed to be the raising of revenue, * * * and, considered as a revenue act, the designation of the stamps, marks, and brands is merely a discharge of an administrative function, etc.

I do not know, I say, that the question has ever been directly raised under that statute, but the constitutionality of the act is evidently assumed by the court in the decision to which I have just referred.

The decision that this side of the Chamber has most depended upon as supporting the validity of this measure is found in the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. This was a case arising under the statute which taxed the circulation of State banks and in the opinion upon the question whether the right of taxation was so excessive as to indicate a purpose on the part of Congress to destroy the franchise of the bank, and therefore beyond the constitutional power of Congress, the court says:

The first answer to this is that the judicial can not prescribe to the legislative department of the Government limitations upon the exercise of its acknowledged powers. The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the courts, but to the people by whom its members are elected. So if a particular tax bears heavily upon a corporation, or a class of corporations, it can not, for that reason only, be pronounced contrary to the Constitution.

One of the attorneys who appeared before the committee of which my colleague is chairman, Mr. Rathbone Gardner, attorney for the Oakdale Manufacturing Company, admits the constitutionality of this legislation. He says:

I do not go into the question of the constitutionality of the proposed act. I have felt that the act would be pronounced constitutional on the same ground that other acts which imposed a tax the purpose of which was really not the collection of revenue have been pronounced by the courts of the United States to be constitutional; upon the same ground upon which I think that the oleomargarine act of 1886 has been by the circuit court pronounced constitutional—upon the ground that the courts of the United States can not impugn the purposes, motives, or intentions of the legislative body.

Mr. President, I had intended to examine the cases that were referred to by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], but it is unnecessary to do so. The Topeka case to which he refers is that of the Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. There is no question about the law there laid down. That case simply raised the question of the validity of a law taxing the public to obtain money which the city proposed either to loan or to give to a manufacturing concern as an inducement to establish in their city a plant for the manufacture of iron bridges, if I remember it correctly. The other cases cited were along precisely the same line. The principle sustained in those cases is elemental. Nobody disputes the soundness of it. But the law under which this tax is imposed is altogether a different one. This tax is imposed for the benefit of the General Government. It is not given to anybody. Those cases can only be made applicable upon the supposition that this legislation is intended to stamp out an industry and to upbuild another one at its expense, and that is not the fact. It is intended to lay the tax upon the false, the spurious, and to reduce the tax upon that which is genuine and has the merit which is claimed for it.

Mr. President, there is in the United States the greatest market for butter which the world affords. The people of the United States have been educated to the use of butter. They know its history. They know its character. They know its quality. Ever since the time mentioned by the eloquent Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], when Abraham welcomed the angels that came to visit him by bringing forth butter for their refreshment, down to the present time, butter, the product of milk, has been known to the world as one of the most choice and valued articles of food.

Stimulated by the example of the Senator from Iowa, I consulted my Bible, believing there was another reference to butter that was even more significant than the one he referred to, and found that the grand old prophet Isaiah, the man who thought with God, and who, looking fifteen hundred years into the future, saw the coming of the Son of God, and exclaimed:

Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel.

Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good.

Butter and honey were the two articles of food to which the human race was then accustomed which were so manifestly perfect in their type and quality that through them could be conveyed to the world in prophecy the character of the spiritual food upon which the Son of God was to be nourished until the time when He should come into the full measure and stature of His manhood and appear as the great teacher of the world, able under all circumstances to "refuse the evil and choose the good."

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. The passage includes both butter and honey, and I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he ought to put a tax on Vermont maple sugar to prevent honey from its competition.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. We have a bill pending to protect those articles. I will come to that before I get through.

Generations have been using butter; generations ever since Abraham; generations which can not be counted. The taste for butter is an inherited taste. It is one that has come to us just as naturally as any taste can come by the process of heredity through successive generations of consumers. We are a nation of butter eaters, and we demand the article in its purity.

Its color, too, for ages has been so well known that it has become a standard for comparison. The assertion has been made that butter is as often white as it is yellow. That is not true. "As red as the rose," and "as blue as the violet," and "as yellow as butter," and "as white as lard" are phrases of comparison which have been known and used beyond the recollection of every Senator present here this afternoon.

But in spite of this fact the manufacturers of oleomargarine have taken the garb in which butter has always appeared. To their product they have added enough of the substance of butter to give it the flavor and the aroma of butter, and now they claim the privilege of placing it upon the market, not for what it is, but in such a way that the people will be deceived into the purchase of the same by the belief that it is butter which they are procuring.

In a single year, out of a total of 104,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine produced, the records show that 80 per cent was sold in the States of this nation, where its sale, when colored in imitation of butter, was contrary to law, and we are also told that 75 to 90 per cent of the oleomargarine sold in those States was sold as butter. This appears over and over again in the record of the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says that oleomargarine is not a direct competitor with butter. I think if he will follow the testimony taken by the committee he will change his opinion in respect to that matter. Mr. Flanders, who is the commissioner of agriculture of New York, says:

In our State it has never been sold, taking it generally—there may be isolated cases—cheaper than butter. For the last fifteen years, as far as I know, and I have been looking after it, I myself bought it for butter in the city of Troy and paid 22 cents a pound, and the butter right opposite was 22 cents a pound. It is sold to consumers for butter and at butter prices. There is no exception to it in the State of New York.

Mr. Blackburn, dairy and food commissioner of Ohio, says in four years time he spent $200,000 in ferreting out frauds, and that probably 60 per cent of it was spent in the detection of frauds in the sale of oleomargarine, and he states as his deliberate judgment that 75 per cent of all the oleomargarine sold in that State was sold for butter and by deceit.

Coming over to Philadelphia—because I want to call your attention to only two or three incidents—I find the record made by Mr. Kauffman, who was conducting the prosecutions against violators of the anticolor law in that city, says there were 508 instances coming under his observation where butter was called for and presumably procured. Four hundred and fifty-nine on examination and analysis proved to be oleomargarine and only forty-nine of them proved to be butter. The secretary of agriculture of Pennsylvania said that he took a thousand samples and in each case those samples proved to be oleomargarine.

Now, coming to the city of Washington, Mr. Knight testified as follows:

I made a search of this town, in company with a Representative from Nebraska, Representative HAUGEN, of Iowa, and Representative DAHLE, of Wisconsin, and we searched every place to find a package of oleomargarine in parchment paper that had any printing on it at all, and we failed to find one in the city.

A circumstance has come to my personal knowledge which occurred in the city of Washington and indicates the way the business has been done under existing law. I was appointed last year as one of the visiting trustees of the Government Reform School located in this city, and when there upon a visit I learned that it was the custom of the officers of that school to advertise monthly for the supplies needed during the next month. They did this on one occasion. They advertised for oleomargarine. They advertised also for butter. They procured both, as they supposed. Before the month was gone they were in doubt and caused both samples to be examined at the Department of Agriculture. One was found to be oleomargarine, and that which had been bought for butter was also found to be oleomargarine, and the Government of the United States had been paying 14 cents for oleomargarine bought as oleomargarine and paying 23 cents for precisely the same article furnished under the name of butter and in answer to the contract which they had made with the grocer to furnish butter.

I have mentioned these instances just as illustrations of what has been going on all over the United States, and it can not be wondered that the people are aroused upon this subject and that they are intensely interested to have the traffic stopped when it is attempted to be carried on by a profitable system of fraud.

The fraud which has been practiced is admitted by the substitute bill, because the bill itself contains only provisions adopted to prevent deceit. All admit, on both sides of the Chamber, that legislation must be had, but the question to be determined is whether that legislation shall be controlled by the manufacturers of an article through which there has been perpetrated upon the American people a great fraud? Shall the manufacturers say what it shall be? Shall they have preserved to them the right of color through which such deceit is perpetrated?

The report of the minority of the committee, which has been laid upon our desks, contains this statement:

The alleged frauds committed in the sale of oleomargarine are not attributed to the manufacturers, upon whom the tax falls, but upon the retail dealers.

This was news to me. My investigation of the subject led me to think that the manufacturers were the parties who were responsible for the fraud. When I noticed this I remembered that the names of a few of the corporations engaged in the manufacture of oleomargarine were suggestive of guilt. Referring to them, the very first name I came across was that of a concern in Providence, R. I., which has adopted the name of the Vermont Manufacturing Company. Why have they adopted the name Vermont Manufacturing Company? It is not a Vermont institution, nor is it a Vermonter who is running it; but Vermont is famed for her butter. Was it not adopted for the purpose of creating a false impression?

I found also the following: The Capital City Dairy Company and the Union Dairy Company. I looked in the Century Dictionary and found that a dairy is "that branch of farming which is concerned with the production of milk and its conversion into butter and cheese." I also found the following: The Lakeside Creamery and the Cold Spring Creamery. I looked again, and found that a creamery was defined to be a place in which milk was "obtained from a number of producers" and "is manufactured into butter." So it goes. You may take almost every name that has been attached to the manufacture of this article and you will find that it is calculated to deceive.

Mr. President, what has been accomplished by this deception? The census taken in 1890 shows that the entire lands, buildings, and machinery of those employed in manufacturing oleomargarine were valued at only $135,000; that the live assets of those corporations was only $500,000, and that the number of workmen employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine, taking in workmen of every class, was less than 2,500—only, in fact, about 2,300. In the ten years which elapsed until the census of 1900, with more than two-thirds of the States composing our Union legislating against the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter, with the national law in full operation, we find there has been an increase of 100 per cent in the number of establishments for the manufacture of this article, that the capital invested in it has increased 376 per cent, that the salaries paid to employees have increased 515 per cent, and that the products have increased 318 per cent.

We find that the number of manufacturers at this time is 30; that they have 186 wholesale dealers, who are really agents when their product is sent into all these States to be disposed of contrary to law; that the retailers of this article in Chicago alone number 2,500; that the retailers in the United States number 10,000, and that through these wholesalers and retailers 80 per cent of the entire product of oleomargarine is unloaded in the manner I have described and in States having an anticolor law.

How has it been done? Are not the manufacturers responsible for this? Mr. Adams, the State dairy commissioner of Wisconsin, states that—

Right across the line in the next State are those large oleomargarine manufacturers. They are pounding at the doors of Wisconsin all the time. The agents of these big companies come into the State and go to the retailers in our State and say: "We want you to sell this oleomargarine. You can make more out of it than you can out of butter, and you can make more out of it than you can out of uncolored oleomargarine." The retailer says, "But we will get into trouble." "Oh, we will stand behind you; that is all right." But the retail dealer answers, "But you won't be here when I am prosecuted," and the agents of those people have sometimes said, "Here is a check for $500; we will stand behind you." For years they have been coming into our State endeavoring to induce our own citizens to break down the law of our State. We do not like it. It is one continuous struggle.

My colleague [Mr. PROCTOR], in opening this discussion, called your attention to the circular of William J. Moxley, one of the largest manufacturers of oleomargarine in the United States, and that circular shows very clearly how this work has been done. In it he says: "We can give just what you want at all seasons if we know your requirements," referring to the color card which he has inclosed in the circular.

The result of these frauds, of the pushing of oleomargarine in this unfair way, was such that in Illinois a certain attorney was employed, not to prosecute those who were selling it as oleomargarine, but to prosecute those who were selling it as butter. In his circular letter to retail dealers, he says:

If you sell oleomargarine this year, rest assured that the State food commissioner and the Illinois Dairy Union will see that you are not permitted to sell it as butter.

The only threat made by him was that they should not be allowed to sell it as butter. This disposes of the assertion so often made before the committee and advanced in this debate that people bought oleomargarine for what it was instead of buying it as butter and paying a butter price for it.

Immediately after that circular went out the manufacturers gathered around the retailers in oleomargarine for their protection, and this same William J. Moxley issued a circular letter to retailers in which he says:

We strongly recommend you to pay no attention to those circulars. We have always been in a position to protect our customers from injustice and blackmailers, and will be ever at your service should you require our aid.

In that same circular he says:

Should this so-called dairy union interfere with your business in the way of prosecution as to State laws, we hereby guarantee you protection to the extent of paying all fines, costs, etc., until the color law is decided unconstitutional in the supreme court of the State of Illinois, and will further, on receiving complaint, take such action for damages as will make it unpleasant for some of those who are attempting to interfere with your and our own legitimate business.

My colleague also introduced to the attention of the Senate the circular that was sent out by Braun & Fitts, also manufacturers of oleomargarine, in response to the letter warning the dealers against selling oleomargarine as butter. Please bear that in mind. They say:

Well, now, don't you believe a word of it; there is a law against blackmailing, and we want now and here to go on record to the assertion, as an affidavit, that we shall civilly and criminally prosecute any man or party of men interfering unlawfully with the butterine business in this or any other State. We know exactly where we stand; we are properly advised on the subject, and now we make you a "fair offer."

And again they say:

Handle our goods as you always have; we in turn promise and guarantee full protection against the State law (which has been declared unconstitutional) to the extent of paying cost of prosecution, fines, and paying all costs pertaining thereto. In declaring the law unconstitutional one of the judges stated to the effect "that the butter ring were, in his opinion, liable to prosecution to recover damages done an honest industry." Fair enough, isn't it? Renew your efforts, and be assured that we will be prepared to fight any number of rounds in any kind of a legal fight to the finish. Handle our butterine and be safe.

That was the assertion and the promise and the undertaking of the manufacturers who, according to the minority report, ought not to be affected by legislation because, as it is said, the fraud is upon the part of the retailer. But here is found the great source of all the fraud. It is in the men who are making enormous profits in the manufacture of colored oleomargarine, sending out circulars to retailers advising them to violate the State laws, to ride roughshod over them, with the promise to guarantee them protection to the extent of paying all fines, costs, etc., by them incurred.

My colleague also introduced a letter from R. C. Dotson, a manufacturer of oleomargarine in Baltimore, in which he speaks of the quality and says:

"Economy"—

That, I think, is the name of the brand which he was producing—

"Economy" is fancy. "Perfection" is the happy medium of grades, good enough for fancy trade. "Clover Creamery"—

Another innocent name—

In producing this fancy grade of butterine scientific research has been exhausted. "Clover Creamery" is the best on earth, by actual test; made by the most approved scientific methods; possessing the very purity and flavor of the clover fields; more perfect uniformity than any other butterine or butter. The cow herself could not tell it.

[Laughter.]

Why was he sending out such a statement unless the great public were the victims and he was inspiring the man to whom he was writing to violate the law of his State to impose upon his customers and to give them a compound the base of which is procured from tallow and from lard, and which contains only a sufficient amount of butter to give it its flavor and to make it in any degree palatable?

What has been the effect of the manufacturers' action? We find that years ago here in this city there was the firm of Wilkins & Co., so testimony produced before the Senate committee says, composed of Walter E. Wilkins, who is now the president of the Standard Butterine Company, doing business in this city, and his brother, Mr. Joseph Wilkins. The records show that Joseph Wilkins and Howard Butler, his clerk, were detected in doing what? They were detected in the railroad yards of Philadelphia removing the marks of identification and the revenue stamps from a carload of oleomargarine which was to be sent to Washington as pure butter. The very thing that the retailer under the substitute bill can do they were detected in doing. They were indicted, and they were convicted. Mr. Wilkins was sentenced to imprisonment. He made an application to President McKinley for a pardon. President McKinley referred it to the Attorney-General of the United States for his opinion. Attorney-General Griggs, in returning the petition, said:

The petitioners, Joseph Wilkins and Howard Butler, were convicted of fraudulently removing labels from packages containing oleomargarine in violation of the act of August 2, 1896, and were sentenced on March 17, 1898, as to Wilkins, to imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of $1,500 and costs, and as to Butler, to imprisonment for four months and to pay a fine of $500 and costs.

I will not read the entire record; but the Attorney-General, among other things, says:

The records of the office of internal revenue show that Wilkins has been a persistent violator of the oleomargarine laws, and that prior to the present prosecution he has escaped punishment by means of money payments in compromise. The records show that on December 14, 1893, Wilkins filed a proposition to pay $2,100 and costs in compromise of all liabilities, civil and criminal, incurred in the First district of Illinois, for selling oleomargarine as butter, and by violating various sections of the law relating to wholesale dealers in oleomargarine. This offer was accepted December 26, 1893.

About a year later—

April 4, 1895, Wilkins again filed an offer of compromise, agreeing to pay $2,000 in settlement of his liabilities for alleged frauds under the oleomargarine law committed in connection with a firm in West Virginia. This offer was also accepted.

A year later, April 2, 1896, Wilkins was indicted with another in the District of Columbia for selling unstamped oleomargarine. On June 20, 1896, he offered to pay $1,000 in compromise, but this being rejected the case went to trial and the accused was acquitted. There are three separate indictments against him pending now in the District of Columbia for selling oleomargarine in unstamped packages. These indictments were found January 4, 1897.

The Attorney-General further says:

The offense of which the petitioners are now convicted was committed December 20, 1896, two days after the verdict of acquittal in the trial in the District of Columbia.

This man was so hardened in conscience and so beset with a purpose to violate the law that within two days after that acquittal he had committed a fresh offense.

The petitioners were discovered by a revenue agent in the act of scraping off the stamps, marks, and brands from packages of oleomargarine.

The Attorney-General further says:

In connection with the present case an offer to pay $8,000 and costs in compromise was made, but rejected February 23, 1898, and thereupon the case went to trial, with the result above stated.

It is obvious that the business in which Wilkins was engaged must have been one of great profit; otherwise he could not have afforded to make the very large payments in compromise which he did make or offered to make.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him to whom the money was paid?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. To the Government of the United States, as I understand it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where was the money to go?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know. The last offer to compromise by the payment of $8,000 by Wilkins was declined. If anybody thinks that manufacturers are not guilty of perpetrating a fraud upon the public when their agents can offer to compromise their offenses by paying such enormous sums, I shall be glad to have him read the whole opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. I rose more particularly to reply to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I was commissioner at the time, and the money was deposited in the hands of the commissioner to be turned over to the Government in case it was accepted in compromise. I believe the Senator from Connecticut asked where the money was to go. The offer was refused, and a prosecution followed, and he was put in the penitentiary. We turned the money back.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Now, Mr. President, there is another interesting chapter in the history of this man Wilkins, so convicted. After he was indicted by the Federal grand jury and his business broken up, and while, in fact, as I understand it, this conviction was hanging over him, he was employed by the firm of Braun & Fitts, of Chicago, whose circular I have referred to, as a director to their salesmen, and I have only to add that the record which I have read indicates that he must have been a most accomplished director of those who were to go out and perpetuate the methods which he had adopted in defrauding the public, but which for a season he was prevented from following.

Added to all this effort on the part of the manufacturers to force their product upon the market has been the further temptation on the part of the retailers to make enormous profits. The Mr. W. P. Wilkins who is the president of the butterine factory in this city says in the prospectus which he issued when that factory was in process of construction that the cost of producing oleomargarine, including the tax of 2 cents a pound, would be $8.92 per 100 pounds. Then he adds:

The above cost, when deducted from the market price of $13 per 100 pounds, shows a net profit of $4.08.

Then he adds:

It will be seen that even if the company produced only the 400,000 pounds per month for which it now has definite orders, a net profit of over $16,320 a month, or $195,840 a year, would be assured.

A most astonishing statement; and yet it is contained in the prospectus. He adds:

This would mean 8 per cent on the preferred stock of the company, or 20 per cent of the entire capitalization.

Governor Hoard, when he came before the Committee on Agriculture, made this statement:

What does oleomargarine cost? Armour & Co., of Chicago, testified before a Federal district court of New York that with a 2-cent Federal tax added the cost was less than 7 cents a pound. If it was uncolored the poor could buy it for 10 cents, or at most 12 cents a pound. Yet I saw the colored article selling in Ashland, Wis., to the poor for 28 cents a pound.

It was the Mr. Wilkins who is the president of the Standard Butterine Company who wrote the other letter produced by my colleague in which the offer was made to furnish butterine, "A substitute for butter that can not be detected." Now, who makes the profit in this business? Referring to the other circular letter introduced in evidence, and we find that the Capital City Dairy Company, of Columbus, Ohio, were corresponding with their retailers and offering their variety of oleomargarine, known as "Purity," at 14 cents a pound, and advising the retailer that it could be sold at 20 cents, making a profit to the retailer of 6 cents a pound; that they would sell the "Buckeye" brand at 17 cents a pound, and that it could be easily sold for 25 cents a pound, a profit of 8 cents; and that the "Pride" variety could be sold at 18 cents a pound and retailed at 30, or at a profit of 12 cents a pound.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says that Secretary Gage testified that the temptation would be too small under the substitute bill to lead any retailer to remove the labels and sell colored oleomargarine as butter; but if the profit upon it is as large as indicated, you can see at a glance that both temptation and opportunity still remain to remove the stamps and the wrappers from the packages and to pack the substance in tubs and sell it for butter, as was done by Wilkins with the carload of oleomargarine in Philadelphia.

Now, the question suggests itself whether manufacturers supporting the substitute bill shall through its provisions secure to the retailer an opportunity to defraud the public and impose upon them an article deceptive in character.

The real object they seek is well expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Plumley case, to which I have already referred. In that case it appeared that oleomargarine in its natural condition is of a "light yellowish color" and that the article sold by the accused was artificially colored "in imitation of yellow butter." The court says:

Now, the real object of coloring oleomargarine so as to make it look like genuine butter is that it may appear to be what it is not, and thus induce unwary purchasers, who do not closely scrutinize the label upon the package in which it is contained, to buy it as and for butter produced from unadulterated milk, or cream from such milk. The suggestion that oleomargarine is artificially colored so as to render it more palatable and attractive can only mean that customers are deluded by such coloration into believing that they are getting genuine butter. If anyone thinks that oleomargarine, not artificially colored so as to cause it to look like butter, is as palatable or as wholesome for purposes of food as pure butter, he is, as already observed, at liberty under the statute of Massachusetts to manufacture it in that State or to sell it there in such manner as to inform the customer of its real character. He is only forbidden to practice, in such matters, a fraud upon the general public. The statute seeks to suppress false pretenses and to promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food. It compels the sale of oleomargarine for what it really is, by preventing its sale for what it is not.

But the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], after quoting the opinion of Professor Schweitzer, to the effect that, if carefully made, physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter, made the inquiry, "If these things be true, what is the harm if a man intending to buy butter shall buy butterine by fraudulent imposition of his dealer?"

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. I hope the Senator from Vermont will allow me to state what I did say.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. MONEY. I said, if you can not tell the difference by the taste, by the color, by the smell, or by its digestibility, and no harm is done, what is the odds? And I say that again.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will answer the Senator from Mississippi in the language of Governor Hoard, of Wisconsin, who has given this matter great attention. He says:

The normal heat of the human stomach is 98°. Butter melts at 92°, 6° below the heat of the stomach, passes into pancreatic emulsion, and digestion. Nature designed this fat in its raw state for food.

Oleomargarine melts at the varying temperature of 102° to 108°, a temperature no healthful stomach ever attains. As a consequence this unnatural foreign fat must be expelled by sheer gastric action and force.

Butter fat is found in the milk of all mammals. It is chemically and physically unlike any other fat in existence. It was designed by nature for the food and sustenance of infant offspring, having the most delicate of all digestion. Because of this most evident purpose and provision of nature butter forms a healthful and important article of food in milk, cream, and in its separated state.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I do not want to trespass on the courtesy or the time of the Senator, but I will ask him if Governor Hoard is an expert chemist, or doctor, or anything else, so that he is able to form a judgment about these things, or does he get his information elsewhere; and if so, from whom? The testimony is overwhelming, I say, almost unanimously so, of experts, chemists, and others, that oleomargarine is just as wholesome and as nutritious and as digestible as butter.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will refer to the testimony taken before the committee, he will see that there was some testimony on the other side.

Mr. MONEY. There was one witness, and there may have been two, who so testified; but I say the overwhelming preponderance of testimony is the other way.

Mr. SPOONER. You argue that one thing in favor of oleomargarine is that it keeps longer. It does, in the stomach. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONEY. It keeps longer anywhere.

If the Senator from Vermont will permit me right here, I wish to say that I have now on my desk a letter from a chemist, who was one of the three appointed by the legislature of New York to make a chemical analysis of this food twenty years ago, when the subject was first agitated, and he reported that oleomargarine was absolutely wholesome and nutritious and a very valuable contribution to the list of foods; and I have now that oleomargarine which he examined twenty years ago, and it is still good. You could not say that of butter.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President—

Mr. MONEY. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is not necessary.

Governor Hoard has for twenty years been investigating the subject of dairy products. He has made an exhaustive study of them. I do not know of any man in America, perhaps, who is better informed regarding them than Governor Hoard.

Now, answering the question in another way, suppose that we carry the same inquiry to the article of milk as a food. I have an ingenious neighbor who, years ago, when people were making filled cheese, invented a machine by which melted lard could be so combined with skimmed milk that it would enter into the curd and furnish the fat for filled cheese. Suppose oleomargarine is permitted, without discouragement, to be colored like butter, why should not the dealer in milk have the right to color his mixture of skimmed milk and lard in semblance of Jersey milk and impose it upon his customers? What would prevent the restaurateur from serving it to us as "half and half" when we go for our daily lunch? We could not tell the difference. If the imposition is right in one instance, why not in the other?

The truth is, Mr. President, that the American people are getting sick of being humbugged, whether it is by imitation butter, whether it is by adulterated milk, whether it is by adulterated maple sugar, or whether it is by honey that is made of glucose. We have a committee of this Senate that is investigating this very question, a committee that sat in all the principal cities a year or two ago taking testimony, and a committee that will, I hope, very soon be able to present a measure here that shall be so effective in its operations that the American people will be protected in their rights, at least in securing that which is pure and wholesome and good as an article of food.

Coming again to the question of color, and whether the makers of oleomargarine have the right to use this color, as they have done, in foisting upon the public a spurious article, I beg to refer to a case recently decided in the Supreme Court. I think the opinion was handed down on the 6th of January of this year. It was the case of the Dairy Company v. Ohio. In it the court used this language:

The supreme court of Ohio, however, having before it the evidence introduced upon the issues of fact made in the pleadings, held that oleomargarine was an article which might easily be manufactured so as to be hurtful, and thus result in fraud upon and injury to the public, and that the inhibition of the use of coloring matter in oleomargarine was a reasonable police regulation tending to insure the public against fraud and injury. The purpose of the legislature in permitting the use of harmless coloring matter in butter and requiring that oleomargarine be sold in its natural state was declared not to be for the purpose of discriminating in favor of butter, but to provide a ready means by which the public might know that an article offered for sale was butter and not oleomargarine.

No one can improve either upon the doctrine or the language of the court which rendered that opinion.

Again, what has been the result of this system of fraud inaugurated by the manufacturers for the deceit of the public? We find that the assistant food commissioner of Illinois says that fully 75 per cent of all the oleomargarine that is retailed in that State is retailed as butter; in Ohio the assistant food commissioner says that 75 per cent of the oleomargarine sold there is sold as butter; in Wisconsin the food commissioner tells us that 90 per cent of all the oleomargarine sold in that State is sold as butter; and in New York the assistant commissioner of agriculture tells us that oleomargarine was universally sold as butter, so far as he knew, without exception.

Again, Mr. President, as showing who opposed this measure before the Committee of the Senate, if any man will read this book [exhibiting] or look through it he will see that Judge Springer is the leading attorney and perhaps the strongest advocate for the substitute bill of anyone who appeared before the body, and he appeared, as the record shows, for the National Live Stock Association of the United States. He stated that the association consisted of 126 other live-stock associations, a majority of all. He said that it had a capital of more than $600,000,000. Armed with such credentials as those, Judge Springer comes before this committee. But what does Judge Springer say when he gets there? I challenge any man to read his statement or argument without becoming convinced that the great interest that Judge Springer is advocating is the interest of the manufacturers of oleomargarine. There is hardly an argument presented by anybody in favor of the substitute bill that has not first been presented by Judge Springer, and he is a very able man.

But now in the discussion of the question in this body the honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] has lifted the cloud and he has let in a flood of sunshine upon the conditions. In a speech made the other morning in the Senate—a speech that was so fair and candid and strong and convincing that I wish every member of this body might have listened to it—the Senator from Kansas used this language:

As to the interests of the cattlemen being hurt in any possible way I do not for a moment concern myself. The evidence is absolutely conclusive that, even if we should absolutely stop the consumption of oleomargarine in this country, the effect upon the cattle industry of the country would be absolutely inappreciable.

As has been shown, we slaughter about 11,000,000 head of cattle in this country, and the total amount of the value of the product of oleomargarine which is utilized in this country is only about $2,750,000. So that there will be from 25 to 30 cents per steer, and every cattleman knows that that would be absolutely inappreciable.

The Senator from Kansas further said:

The great packing interests control, as I have said, the price of cattle in this country, and—I do not say it with any desire to reflect upon them—considering the opportunities that they have had, they have acted with wonderful fairness and moderation. They have the power, they are members of all the great live-stock exchanges of the country, and they control practically all the great cattle associations everywhere. The commission men are practically all subordinated to the wishes and interests of the great packing houses. Cattle are sent to the great stock yards of this country to be sold, and the seller meets but four or five buyers, representing these great establishments. Every commission merchant knows that unless he is on good terms with the great packing houses his business is liable to suffer, and consequently it is an easy matter for the live-stock exchanges to pass any kind of resolution that may be supposed to be in the interest of these great establishments.

And these are the establishments that turn out the oleo oil that is made into oleomargarine. Now, I want to read further from the speech of the Senator from Kansas. He said:

The cattlemen of the West are a great big-hearted, broad-souled set of men; they live in the open; their lungs are filled with pure air, and their veins are filled with good, warm, red blood. I denounce and deny as a cattleman that the owners of the great cattle ranges and farms of the country are in any way whatever in sympathy with this false pretense that is being made use of by a part only of the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine that is offered for sale throughout the country.

That disposes of that whole question. It is a full explanation of the attitude of the cattlemen who were represented by Judge Springer. To-day the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has introduced a memorial from the cattlemen of his State, in which they make the charge against the proprietors of the creameries of this country that the measure we are supporting is the measure of the creamery proprietors, and that they constitute a great trust controlling that particular industry of the country. Let us see how that is. I find from the statement that has been furnished us that the whole amount of butter produced in this country in 1899 was 1,500,000,000 pounds, and only 300,000,000 pounds were made in creameries; in other words, the butter industry of the country was so far controlled by individual producers that only 20 per cent of all that manufactured came from the creameries of the country, which, it is claimed, have formed a trust.

It is an interesting fact in connection with the discussion of process butter that only three-fourths of 1 per cent of all the butter in the United States is of the process variety.

Mr. President, I want to ask another question. Has the general public made any demand for the substitute bill, or is the general public in favor of the bill now pending, reported by the committee? The nearest approach to anything that has indicated to me that the general public wants the substitute bill was in the question that was put by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], when he was speaking the other day, when the Senator from Texas said:

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the testimony of Commissioner of Internal Revenue Wilson before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last year, in which he said that the demand that oleomargarine be colored came from the purchasers of oleomargarine and the retail dealers—the users of the article, the plain laboring people of the country. I call the attention of the Senator to that statement.

Well, I have looked at the testimony given by Commissioner Wilson, which will be found on page 750 of this book, in which he says:

The incentive which brings about this violation of the law is not limited, in my judgment, simply to the desire for gain upon the part of the retail dealer who is selling oleomargarine. There are other sides to the question. The private family, the boarding-house proprietor, the hotel proprietor do not want to carry home oleomargarine marked as such. We encounter a great deal of that feeling.

He does not say a word about the laboring classes. He does not say a word about the plain people. He says that while some private families dislike to carry home oleomargarine, it is evident that it is the boarding-house and hotel keepers who make that complaint.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the argument of the Senator from Mississippi, made in support of the rights of the wage-earners of the United States. My suggestion, by way of reply, would be, first, if the bill we have under consideration becomes a law, it will reduce the tax on oleomargarine uncolored, and it will give people an opportunity to purchase it in any State in this Union as oleomargarine, and at a price 14 cents per pound less than it could otherwise have been gotten for.

It is said that a reproach attaches to oleomargarine. The time was when a reproach did attach to it, and rightfully enough, because it was a vile compound as manufactured by some in the beginning; but under the operation of the law of 1886 the superintendence over its manufacture has been such that a certain class of men have undoubtedly been driven from the business, and the agitation in Congress has been such as to advertise oleomargarine in all of its component parts.

The general public to-day is educated as to what the materials are that enter into its manufacture, how they are prepared, the cleanly methods which have been adopted, and all of those things which would tend to make oleomargarine respectable in the market and tend to make it something to be desired by those who do not wish to pay a higher price for a finer article of food, so that if this bill is passed these wage-earners are to be provided for; they can have it. Added to that, it has been proven during this investigation that any person may purchase oleomargarine in its natural color, and when he has taken it home he may color it to any tint of yellow he sees fit and present it on his family table in appearance just as beautiful as the finest creamery butter can be made. Under this bill they have the full right to do that; but the people who have not the right to do that are the retailers; the people who have not the right to do that are the hotel keepers; the people who have not the right to do that are the restaurant keepers. They are the men who are swindling all of us when we patronize them; but the wage-earner, who wants the cheaper article because he can not afford the other, can buy it, and he has the right to color it in any way he sees fit so as to make it beautiful to the eye and attractive to the sense.

There were witnesses before the committee who said that the manufacture of oleomargarine was an honest industry, that this bill was calculated to strike down that industry, and they wanted protection for American labor. Mr. McNamee, of the Chicago Federation of Labor, I believe, was one of them. They—the labor element of the country—have demanded the exclusion of the Chinese, and probably every man in the Senate agrees with them that the treaty regulations with China should be fully carried out in the exclusion of Chinese laborers; but when we come to compare the number of people who are employed in these industries, have they the right to demand that the oleomargarine industry should be nourished and propelled by legislation for the protection of American labor? I respectfully invite attention to the fact that in 1890 there were only 2,350 persons employed in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and by the same census there were more than 17,000—yes, 18,000—men who were professional dairymen employed in the production of butter and cheese, and when we came to the farm laborers, who are also largely employed in dairying, there were more than 5,000,000 of them. So that there is no argument in that suggestion.

The trouble is that they misapprehend what the object of this bill is; and it strikes me that they have misapprehended it by misrepresentations which have been made to them, possibly by the manufacturers of this product. Attention has been called, for instance, to the action of the Chicago Federation of Labor where they say that—

Efforts are being attempted by contemplated legislation at Washington to destroy the manufacture and sale of butterine, thereby displacing large numbers of the industrial element—when everybody knows that the object of this bill is not to destroy the production of oleomargarine, but to legalize it and to encourage it as oleomargarine, the only purpose being to stamp it out when it becomes a fraud upon the public.

The painters and decorators of Cleveland, Ohio, also passed a resolution, in which they say:

It is an outrage, in order to gratify the people who make butter, that we should have to go without it and pay two prices for butter which we are compelled by law to eat.

That it is an outrage "that we should be obliged to go without oleomargarine and pay two prices for butter which we are compelled by law to eat." This clearly shows they understood that was the issue; that this bill was to stamp out the production of oleomargarine, rather than to regulate its manufacture and to encourage its sale as oleomargarine.

Another of these gentlemen referred to is Patrick Dolan, president of the United Mine Workers' Union. He says:

Don't want to be deprived of the ability to purchase this wholesome article of food.

He did not know that under this bill he would have the right to purchase it, and purchase it everywhere under the protection of the law, and to purchase it at a price that would not carry with it the price of butter.

Now, if there is anybody else than those I have mentioned who demand the adoption of the substitute bill as against the bill reported by the committee, I do not know who it is.

I have already called attention, Mr. President, to the fact that there are 10,000 retailers of oleomargarine in the United States. If the general public, to whom they have been selling oleomargarine as butter, want to have that practice continued, why have not these 10,000 retailers, with all the opportunity at their command, gathered petitions of their customers and sent them in here as others have sent in petitions? I do not know that a single petition from them has been presented. If there have been any they have escaped my attention. The petitions of that character which have been presented have been so limited in number that no one has paid any attention to them, and yet, if the general public wanted oleomargarine sold in the colored state, as it has been, surely these 10,000 retailers would have been employed as the agents of the manufacturers and those petitions would have come in here thicker than hail.

There is another side to this question, Mr. President. One gentleman appeared before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry who was a manufacturer of oleomargarine. I refer to Mr. Tillinghast, of Providence, R. I., evidently a gentleman of great candor, a man who frankly said that oleomargarine was imitation butter, because, while it had for its base oleo oil and lard, it had also in it a sufficient quantity of butter to give it the aroma and flavor of butter, and had color in it to make it appear to be butter itself. Mr. Tillinghast is perfectly satisfied that this bill is going to pass. He appeared before the committee to make some suggestions about the tax that should be paid by the retailers, and he made the frank confession that he believed that oleomargarine in its natural state, without color, could be sold. He thinks that the people will overcome their prejudice against it.

It is—

He says—

sold to some extent already. I am one of those who believe that oleomargarine now, having been used for a quarter of a century and more, that people, some people at least, having learned that it is a wholesome and cheap article, will continue to use it.

I believe, too, that the American workingman is so intelligent, is so much of a reader and so much of an investigator that, with the discussion that has been going on here, he will have the right conception of what oleomargarine is, and that he will buy it, whatever the color of it may be, whenever he wants a cheaper article than butter.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Vermont yield to the senior Senator from Vermont?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I desire to inquire of my colleague if Mr. Tillinghast, the president of a Vermont manufactory manufacturing oleomargarine, did not testify that he was making and selling oleomargarine uncolored?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. He testified that he was selling it in Massachusetts and selling it in Connecticut where they have anticolor laws. He evidently sees a great future before him as a manufacturer of oleomargarine with this bill passed, when he can sell it strictly in accordance with law; and with the quality which he gives to his manufacture, make a market which can only be made when people have faith in the product which is placed before them.

Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended, but it is evident to me that, in order to regulate this matter once and for all, we must go to the root of it, and require that when butter is sold, it shall be sold as butter, and when oleomargarine is sold, it shall be sold as oleomargarine.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Vermont before he leaves the question of color and the sale of uncolored oleomargarine. On page 11 of the hearings before the Senate committee, I wish to suggest to the Senator the testimony of Mr. Springer who stated that—

The question is one of relative importance only. I do not wish to be understood as saying that in Denmark the consumption amounted to 15 pounds per capita by reason of the fact that the consumers were permitted to color it themselves. I stated that they were permitted to color it, and that that fact may have contributed to that large consumption. I have no fears whatever of conditions generally which will permit the consumption of 15 pounds per capita per annum of oleomargarine in the United States.

It shows that in Denmark the sale is very much greater than it is in the United States, because it is sold uncolored.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am very much obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that statement. It had escaped me entirely as I was carrying on this discussion.

There never was a time in the history of our Government that we were not in need of revenue. We have just taken off the war taxes. I do not know how much larger revenue we will derive under this bill than is received under the present law, but probably not so much as would be supposed, because the new act will probably operate to discourage the manufacture of the colored article and the tax upon the uncolored article will be reduced from 2 cents a pound to one-fourth of 1 cent a pound.

I was very much struck the other day when the Senator from Wisconsin was discussing this bill with the point he made that public policy demands that this article be sold for just precisely what it is. I sent for the statutes of Canada, and I find that they provide that "food shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this act if any substance has been mixed with it, so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength;" again, "if any inferior or cheaper substance has been substituted, wholly or in part, for the article;" again, "if it is an imitation of or is sold under the name of another article."

The result of that statute, we are informed by Governor Hoard in his argument, is this:

Compare the policy pursued by the United States with that of Canada. The Dominion government guards the purity and honesty of her dairy products to the extent of absolute prohibition of any adulteration or counterfeiting of the same. As a result, her export of cheese to England alone has grown in twenty years from $3,000,000 to $20,000,000, while ours has declined nearly the same amount because we did not place the strong hand of the law on the adulterated product—filled cheese—until we had lost the confidence of the foreign consumer.

The Dominion of Canada has taken from us nearly all of our once magnificent export trade in dairy products. Canada absolutely prohibits the making of counterfeit butter or cheese.

It seems to me, in view of all the facts that have been produced in this discussion, a manifest duty is laid upon us to take away the temptation for fraud which exists under present conditions. I believe we can best do this by placing upon the medium of that fraud a burden too great to be profitably borne. The bill reported by the committee is equitable in all its features. While it imposes a heavy rate of taxation upon oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter it also reduces the taxation upon oleomargarine offered for sale in its natural color, thus affording the purchaser of that article an opportunity to secure the same at a price 14 cents per pound less than he otherwise could do. By the adoption of this measure we protect the manufacturer of oleomargarine in all of his rights; we protect a time-honored industry in its rights; added to this, we protect the great army of consumers, who, without such legislation, are defenseless.

Mr. President, we represent here to-day 45 States. Thirty-two of them have adopted laws which prohibit the sale of oleomargarine within their borders when colored in imitation of butter. The legislatures of these States represent 80 per cent of the people of the United States. It has been impossible for the State authorities to enforce their statutes owing to the determined purpose of many of the manufacturers of oleomargarine to impose their goods upon the public in the garb of and as butter. The States are in a helpless condition. They appeal to this body to so adjust its system of taxation that incidentally protection may be given to the great army of dairymen in the United States against a fraud upon their industry, and the still greater army of consumers of dairy products. Shall we not respond by the adoption of this measure?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I intend to vote for this bill. I can give my reasons as clearly in ten minutes as I could in a ten-hour speech. I am not able to enthuse myself as our farmer Senators from Wisconsin and Iowa over the subject of protection to the cow. My associations with that quadruped have not been such as to bear fruits of enthusiastic admiration. I believed in my earlier days that she was rather a necessary evil, and that firmly fixed impression still clings to me.

But I do feel if there is any being on the face of this earth who is justly entitled to protection it is the man who owns and is compelled to attend to the desires and thwart the inclinations of that animal.

The opportunities to enact legislation directly beneficial to the product of the great army of agriculturists are so limited that whenever one is offered to protect any of their goods the duty to extend legislative aid becomes a most stringent moral obligation upon Congress.

The agriculturist is of the one class who always sells his product for just what it is. It may not always be the best, but it always leaves his hands with its true stamp. His butter may not always be the finest, but he sells his butter for butter, his lard for lard, and if it is poor, if it is fit for axle grease only, he only gets axle-grease prices for it. The man who renovates bad butter is seldom ever the farmer.

He is not asking very much; just simple, everyday honesty. His class constitutes about one-half of the people of the United States, and if he sells his products honestly and fairly for just what they are to the other half he is entitled by the law of commercial integrity to receive honest goods from them in return.

He is entitled to secure sirup when he buys sirup, and not glucose. He is entitled to have his coffee coffee, and not chicory, and legislation should not stop with the prohibition of colored oleomargarine alone. A pure-food bill—one that shall protect him in his sale as well as in his purchases—should also become a law.

The price of much of his product being fixed by foreign demand, where he is brought into close competition with all the cheap labor of all the balance of the world, while he does his part to protect all other industries from like competition, every principle of national justice and reciprocal integrity demands that he have an honest, fair field of competition in our home markets free from counterfeit and gross deceit.

He has a right to eliminate from that field of consumption this conglomerated mass of greases and deodorized rot that, under the head of "Finest Elgin butter" or other falsehood, comes into competition with his honest labors.

I regret that it has been found necessary to employ a somewhat deceptive bill to meet an insidious fraud, but the man who practices the fraud of selling a low grade of hog fat with a little suet for butter can not be heard to complain of the character of the weapon that is used against him. Selling his own articles under a false brand, flying them under false colors, he is not in a position to complain that the blow aimed at his product is struck from behind a shield with an erroneous or false title.

Everyone knows that this bill is intended to tax colored oleomargarine out of existence, although it is under the guise of a revenue bill which has never been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. I was unable to follow the fine distinction drawn by the Senator from Massachusetts the other day, when, as I understood him, he denied the constitutional right to tax the colored article out of existence except upon the theory that it operated to assist the Government in the collection of a tax upon the uncolored. My understanding of the law is that once concede the right to tax any article or product, you concede the right to confiscate the very article itself to answer that tax, and the extent of the tax—the limit of amount—is always a legislative and not a judicial question, and may be levied for the very purpose of annihilation.

But if there is any other way whereby we can reach the evil legislated against; if there is any way by which we can so compel the branding of this article so that it can not come on any table without a card of identification, then I should prefer that other method.

The most strenuous objectors to this bill have shown no way by which this object can be accomplished other than by the character of legislation proposed. All other attempted remedies have failed. All their stress of argument is laid upon what they call an infringement of a right to make their goods presentable and palatable by coloring.

It is evident, however, that while this objection may enter into their protest, the great, the one important reason for the objection is that the coloring enables them to perpetuate a fraud.

The demand for their goods depends upon the amount consumed in the household, in the boarding houses, in the ranches, and in the logging camps, and the amount so consumed depends almost wholly on the extent and the ability to counterfeit.

If this is true, then the colored article should be prohibited. If it is not true, then this law would be no hardship on the manufacturers and dealers in colored oleomargarine. If they wish to avoid this tax, let them cease to counterfeit butter. Let them first make a good, wholesome food out of wholesome oils and fats—one that will receive the approval of eminent chemists and food specialists—and then let that article, with its high indorsement, work its way into favor on its own merits, just as all other necessary manufactured food products have been compelled to do.

This, Mr. President, it seems to me, is all that they in right can ask of the legislators, and if that right is granted them they are in no position whatever to complain. There is nothing whatever in this bill which prevents them from selling their article for just exactly what it is, and no hardship is perpetrated upon them by requiring them so to do. These, Mr. President, briefly are my reasons in support of this bill.

Mr. HEITFELD obtained the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. HEITFELD. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Does the Senator from Idaho rise to speak on the pending bill?

Mr. HEITFELD. I do.

Mr. PROCTOR. Possibly on account of the lateness of the hour the Senator would prefer to defer his remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. HEITFELD. I would prefer to do so, with the understanding that I retain the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly. I will give notice, then, that after the routine morning business to-morrow I will ask to have this bill taken up, and I shall expect the Senator from Idaho to resume the floor at that time.

Mr. HEITFELD. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. PROCTOR. It will probably be about half past 12 o'clock.

Mr. HEITFELD. Very well.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the sundry civil appropriation bill; and pending that motion I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] whether he is prepared now to suggest a time for closing general debate?

Mr. BENTON. Not exactly. About two hours and a half have been asked for on this side, so far as I know. I do not know what arrangements the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], the leading member of the minority of the committee, made before he left the city. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois allow the debate to run along for a while without any arrangement, and it may be that before night we can agree to close the debate this afternoon.

Mr. CANNON. I have not had any application for time for general debate on this side. I think I can get through myself in thirty minutes. What does the gentleman say to closing the general debate with the end of to-day's session? If the debate gives out we can, of course, commence the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule earlier.

Mr. BENTON. I would not like to agree to that until I see whether other members, that I do not now know about, have been promised time by the gentleman from Arkansas. So far as I am personally concerned, I will say that I would be willing to close the general debate at the close of to-day's session. I suggest, however, that for the present the debate run along without any arrangement.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am desirous of passing this bill, not with lightning speed, but as rapidly as may be practicable from a business standpoint. I have no desire to prevent reasonable debate, but I trust that later we may agree that the debate close to-day.

Mr. BENTON. I prefer to ask the gentleman to let the debate run along without limitation until the close of the day.

Mr. CANNON. I have accepted the suggestion of the gentleman upon that point.

The SPEAKER. The question is now the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill may be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose in presenting this bill to the committee to take much time. So far as I am concerned, I am content with saying that the bill has been carefully prepared by the Committee on Appropriations, is believed to provide liberally for the public service, and I should be glad to have it considered at this stage of the session in good faith directly upon the merits of the bill. With the large latitude that has been given to general debate and under the five-minute rule heretofore, I suggest that we have come to a time in the session when we could well devote ourselves to the matter in hand.

The bill is pretty thoroughly analyzed by the report, being report No. 1260. If gentlemen now or hereafter desire to have the bill in a nutshell, the report thoroughly gives it. The estimates, original and supplemental, for this bill amount in round numbers to $61,779,000. The bill recommends $49,323,000, or, in other words, below the estimates the bill recommends $12,455,000. The bill for the current year, for purposes of comparison, carried nearly $62,000,000. The present bill is a reduction over the bill for the current year of twelve million and a half of dollars. Your committee in the consideration and reporting of this bill, while it has striven to and I believe has recommended liberally for the public service, has made its recommendations from the standpoint of the new conditions that surround the Treasury, in light of the tax-reduction bill of last year covering, as is estimated, $41,000,000, and in light of the bill now pending in conference to remove the remainder of the war taxation, estimated at $70,000,000, the two together, if this legislation is enacted, and I will assume that it is to be enacted, because it is morally certain that it will be, making a reduction of revenues of $111,000,000.

I am heartily glad of it, because it leaves sufficient revenue, in my judgment, under the law when thus amended to carry on liberally the public service. I am not here to talk to any considerable extent about the undesirability of too much revenue. There is only one thing worse than too much revenue, and that is too little revenue. I think when the law is amended, as it is soon to be, that we will strike the happy medium, gathering great blocks of revenue for great blocks of service, and that we will be armed when the law is thus amended with weapons of defense against those who would exploit the Treasury of the United States for too much of appropriation. The report explains in detail the various reductions.

One matter that explains considerable of the reduction is that last year one very large item—three millions and a half—was carried by this bill for the public debt that the United States was bound to pay of the Hawaiian Islands, and so on, with other various matters, some of that kind and others representing real economies in the public service. There are many things that we considered, that were estimated for, that are not in this bill. One that I will call attention to was a small estimate of $5,000 for the purpose of making plans for a National Museum building. Gentlemen understand the necessity for that building. That something ought to be done in the early future is patent. Your Committee on Appropriations tried to place a limitation on the plans. We called in the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, and we examined various public officials to see if we could not make that limitation.

After consideration they did not believe that a building could be constructed for less than $4,000,000. Your committee is of opinion that we ought not to commence plans upon a $4,000,000 basis. In our judgment we can build for one million and a half to two millions of dollars a building that will answer the National Museum for the next quarter of a century, and when those who have such matters in charge come to the ideas that your committee has touching this matter it will be time enough to grant an appropriation to begin the plans. There was much of pressure, as there is before many committees, to take into consideration extensive erections of public buildings and plans for the same in the District of Columbia; much of pressure for the improvement of parks in the District of Columbia. Your committee went quite fully into this whole subject. That some additional buildings are required in the city of Washington is patent; that something of improvement is required for the public parks in the city of Washington is evident, but after a full investigation substantially your committee have not recommended that action be taken at this time.

There is a great industry here in the city of Washington, and there is but one industry here, and that is to exploit the public treasury for improvements in the city of Washington without cost to the local population. I do not say this unkindly. It is but natural, and history repeating itself as to all capitals of great nations. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to talk a great while about this bill, but I am inclined to accept the conditions of the Committee of the Whole, as noted, that it would, perhaps, be best to discuss this bill under the five-minute rule. We have made one recommendation, however, for an improvement to one of the parks of the city—that is, to begin an improvement at Potomac Park, $70,000. Gentlemen, understand that some years ago, by law, the Potomac Flats, which have been reclaimed in large part, were dedicated as a public park, and are now a part of the system. It will cost a great deal of money to properly improve this great park, and we ought to go at it slowly, but we ought to make progress. After full investigation, your committee recommends $70,000 for the purpose of continuing a road along the river bank in the vicinity of the national monument, for the purpose of building a wall about where the public bathing beach is now situated, and for the removal of that bathing site to barges or elsewhere other than it is now.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he has yet discussed the recommendation of the committee as to the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. BENTON. At the proper time I should like a statement about that.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will remind me a little later on, I will come to that.

Your committee might perhaps well have made additional recommendations, but in the present condition we thought best to rest with this one recommendation.

Great plans have been made for the extension of the park system in the District of Columbia. We already have a great park system, many hundreds of little parks scattered all through the city, and then we have the Zoo. We have Rock Creek Park, and have had it for many years. The future is well cared for and well assured from the standpoint of the Government service in the District of Columbia and for the convenience of its inhabitants and for the welfare and pleasure of all the people. But this system of parks being reserved, we can go slowly. The Almighty did much in the Rock Creek Park. If you just let it alone, making a few roads, which are gradually being constructed, you can not improve much upon nature, and it will not be necessary for a decade to make much of an expenditure in that splendid park.

There is a park commission proposition that has never been adopted by Congress, and, so far as I am concerned, I am inclined to say never will be adopted by my vote. It was not a self-appointed commission, but a commission appointed by the coordinate branch of Congress under a resolution. That commission made their plans, splendid and magnificent. When the improvement is complete, it is to cost $200,000,000. As I understand it, it involves the condemning of all the territory between the Mall and Pennsylvania avenue, and the payment of the damages from the public Treasury, and a great many other matters that in my judgment ought not to be enacted.

Mr. BENTON. Is it not a matter of fact that this property was once the property of the Government and that they are proposing to buy it back?

Mr. CANNON. I am not advised as to that. That may be true; but it is now the property of individuals. I will not enter upon a discussion of its merits. It may come later in connection with this bill or some other bill. My position and that of your committee, I think without dissent, as I understand it, is about as follows: That for construction of public buildings to carry on the public business in the city of Washington we stand quite ready to cooperate, and recommend all apt appropriation as speedily as the public service requires and the public revenues will allow, with due regard for the public service elsewhere in the United States.

The second proposition is to beautify the city without regard to the public service and to make it a beauty spot in the United States. As to that great project the position of your committee is that we shall go just so fast in beautifying the city of Washington as the people of the city of Washington are willing to go and no faster, paying half the expenses thereof by taxation. That is a very good check upon that kind of improvements. Therefore, in the improvement of this park, $70,000, which but commences it, we provide that one-half of that sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District. And so as to all the great park systems of the District of Columbia, your committee are thoroughly of opinion that they ought to be and must be improved, one-half from the Treasury of the United States and the other half by local taxation.

There is one other matter that I want to call to the attention of the committee. There is a great cry for a hall of records in the District. There is a great cry for the erection of a palace of justice, a new State Department, and so on, and so on. Some of these works might well be commenced, but they ought to be commenced with care to make them fairly agree with the improvements that have been made in the District on the one hand and to shut off extravagance upon the other.

Much that is said about a hall of records might well be unsaid if the Government of the United States paid enough attention to the records of the United States to preserve the records that ought to be preserved and to destroy those that are of no account.

I will illustrate what I mean. Your committee made an investigation touching the records in the Census Office, and we found there in a rented building substantially fireproof the population schedules from the First Census down to the present. They came asking an appropriation of $15,000 to bind the population schedules of the census of 1890. They have done it for several years. We have turned it down for several years, and on this investigation we find now of those old, useless population schedules, commencing with the year 1790, 400 tons, kept in a rented building, heated and lighted, with watchmen and laborers and a force of clerks. They are of no manner of use on earth in my judgment except to furnish a reason for paying rent to somebody to house them and to afford employment to the employees who have charge of them. You know what a population schedule is. That is the schedule that the enumerator makes out when he visits you all over the country: How many in the family? Married? How many children? Ages, residence, where born, and so forth, and so forth. Well, now, those schedules come in and are tabulated, and the tabulation is published, and after that, in my judgment, they are of no account.

When the question of destroying them was presented, those having them in charge threw up their hands in holy horror. "Oh," you say, "but what use are they?" "Oh, somebody may want to know who lived at Winsted, in Connecticut, in 1790, and what was his name and whether he was married." "Well, but it is not evidence." "Well, but sometimes we get inquiries." They are not evidence. Now, then, I undertake to say that 400 tons of population schedules, some of which has been taken care of for a century and all of which are being cared for now by a force of clerks, laborer, watchman, light, heat, and rent ought to be destroyed. And there are lots of records of no more account than these. If we had the departments intelligently cleared of useless records, in my judgment there is plenty of space to accommodate the public service of the United States in the city of Washington.

Another matter that your committee investigated. On the sundry civil law for the current year the following provision is found:

To enable the Architect of the Capitol to prepare and submit to Congress at its next session plans, specifications, and estimates of cost for reconstructing and extending in a fireproof manner the central portion of the Capitol building; the renovation and decoration of the Rotunda; also for the construction of a fireproof building adjacent to the grounds of the Capitol building, to be used for offices, storage and power plant purposes connected with the Capitol building, $1,500, to be immediately available.

The Architect of the Capitol took this question up. Gentlemen may be aware that the Capitol never was completed; that on the east part the original plans, specifications, and drawings were all made long ago. There was to be a wing east corresponding with the wing west. The Dome itself extends over the wall on the east. It would add to the architectural effect, would give more room, that is needed, in the Capitol. It would permanently house the Supreme Court, with consultation rooms, ample quarters for attorneys, ample quarters for a library, and would almost, in addition, double for committee rooms space that was added in the western extension of the Capitol. Now, the investigation shows that to complete the Capitol would cost $2,500,000; to renovate the rotunda $275,000.

In addition to that, under this provision of the law the Architect of the Capitol has ascertained that to construct a tunnel from the Capitol somewhere to land that is south of us, or southeast or southwest, near by the Capitol grounds, and to complete a building with 400 rooms in it, in a style of architecture that would comport fairly well with the surroundings of the Capitol and Library of Congress, and construct a tunnel from the Capitol to such building, constructing such a building with a great basement that would hold all the documents and that would hold in addition the heating apparatus of the Capitol, move it all out and your lighting apparatus into such a building, giving additional room in the Capitol for committee rooms, removing the condition that we have from musty documents, that the construction of such a building would cost, in round numbers, $4,000,000, and that, with the completion of the Capitol, would cost $6,775,000.

In the judgment of your committee this is one of the earliest improvements that ought to be made in the public buildings. On the Senate side Senators have their office rooms in the Maltby Building or the Capitol. On the House side there is a very general complaint upon the part of members that if they have places in which to transact their business that they have either to utilize quarters at their houses and hotels or that they have got to go and lease them. This scheme, if adopted, would enable each Representative to have a comfortable room near by the Capitol for office purposes. [Applause.]

Now, I call attention to this fact because I want the House to bear in mind that after investigation for a hall of records, a new State Department, a new Department of Justice, and various other schemes that are talked about ought to wait until this improvement is authorized and begun before these are authorized. This, in my judgment, is the first thing to do. Now, then, I want to say further, that your committee did not see proper to report this provision, but have suggested that I call attention of the House to it for the reason that in the present condition, with this reduction of a great block of the revenue, that probably it would be well enough to wait until we could reasonably forecast what the revenues will be before we authorize or recommend the construction—until the next session of Congress.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Was there any investigation by the committee as to whether it was feasible or not to add more stories to the Capitol building, and thereby provide rooms for members for work?

Mr. CANNON. Your committee was thoroughly satisfied, from taking counsel with the architects in part—and you know they do not entirely agree—but the best opinions seems to be that it would not be practicable to do more than to expend $2,000,000 in continuing to complete the Capitol, for the eastern extension, according to the original plan. We therefore consider that it would be much better to get rid of the heating and lighting apparatus and construct a building just across from the public grounds here.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did the committee make any inquiry as to the feasibility of erecting stories on top of this building?

Mr. CANNON. The consensus of opinion seemed to be against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. The gentleman's suggestion as to the construction of a building to accommodate members of Congress has been postponed, has it?

Mr. CANNON. We did not report any provision for the same for the reason that with the universal hunger for promotion of the public service—and I speak of it respectfully, because I am one of the hungry ones, along with other gentlemen—that under all the conditions, with what is in front of us at this session of Congress, we thought best to call the attention of the House to the various propositions that would probably be pressed upon us in connection with public buildings in the District, and to express our opinion that, everything considered, in our judgment, that matter had better go over until the succeeding sessions of Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me for the interruption, but I feel a great interest in the question. If members of Congress would express their wishes about it now, does the gentleman believe that the committee would recommend it?

Mr. CANNON. It would be in the power of the House, if they want to commence it at once, to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It seems to me it is more important to preserve the health of members of Congress than it is to preserve the old, dusty records.

Mr. CANNON. I think so, and I am calling it to the attention of the House, so that if we do not commence it now—whether we commence it now or at the next session this is the first great improvement along the line of public buildings that ought to be undertaken in Washington, because, in the judgment of the committee, it is the most needed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It seems to me that the suggestion that the committee makes will meet with the hearty concurrence of all the members, not only as to the mere suggestion, but that they would be in favor of taking it up and going on with it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is the object of my calling the attention of the House to the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire to supplement what the gentleman from Alabama has just said, and I think it will meet with the unanimous approval of the members of the House. This is the first construction that we ought to begin. I hope the gentleman's committee, under his able and economical administration, will see to it that the much-needed building is started early in its progress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter, answering my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BENTON], that I want to call attention to, and that is the improvement of Yellowstone Park. Gentlemen understand about it. For twenty-five years, substantially, we have been appropriating money for the improvement of Yellowstone Park. We have been paying current expenses and adding a little improvement year by year, until there is a condition of that park that satisfies your committee, after very thorough inquiry, ought to be met. All necessary roads can be constructed, all necessary bridges can be constructed, all the roads can be surfaced so as to get rid of the dust and get a permanent, firm road, including the making of the necessary roads across the forest reservation to the south of the park and bridges across the forest reservation east of the park, open a road from Great Falls to Yanceys, and otherwise finish these improvements for about $750,000. It will require three years to do it. If done, it will be under the charge of the engineers of the Army; in fact, these improvements for a number of years have been under their charge, and the park has been policed for a number of years by a troop of cavalry.

Your committee was of opinion, after a thorough investigation, that this work ought to be completed, and then it can be maintained annually thereafter for about $30,000. So we appropriated $250,000 and authorized contracts for the two succeeding years of $250,000 each, with a view of completion of this work.

Now, I will not multiply words, but it seems to me I have fairly covered the ground in connection with the recommendations in this bill, and when we come to consider it under the five-minute rule I will stand quite ready to answer any suggestion that can be urged or answer any questions to the best of my ability.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-eight minutes.

Mr. LLOYD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I notice the statement that the committee has reduced the expenditure of the Geological Survey $80,000. What is the purpose of that reduction?

Mr. CANNON. That is apparent and not actual. On page 2 of the report the gentleman will see that it says:

This reduction is apparent, not actual, $60,000 having already been appropriated for investigation of the mining resources of Alaska and $11,200 for rent of building being transferred to the legislative act, leaving, in fact, a net increase of $1,000 in the total appropriations for the Survey, which amount is given as an increase in the appropriation from $3,000 to $4,000 for expenses of transmitting documents through the Smithsonian exchange.

Mr. LLOYD. I notice the remarks in the report. I note in the estimate made by the Department amounts to $1,024,207, while the committee have appropriated $880,000. What was it that they applied for and what is it that the committee have not included in the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. They wanted an increase all along the line. There was a provision on the bill for the current year that directed the Secretary to make specific estimates for his whole force; and in the making of those estimates there was somewhat of an increase. On fuller investigation we concluded it was not practicable for the Secretary to estimate or the committee to recommend specifically for the scientific corps, because, in our judgment, it is a live service, and the Bureau had better be left to this administration employing scientists from time to time for necessary work, and then letting them go out of employment when not required. That explains part of the matter. Another part is the publication of maps. My recollection is that for this they wanted $100,000; we gave them $70,000.

I want to say, touching this service, that it is a great service, a growing service. It has got about legs enough to crawl itself. [Laughter.] It has a wonderfully bright head and a wonderfully meritorious one I will frankly say, in my judgment.

Mr. LLOYD. I concur in what the gentleman says on that point.

Mr. CANNON. It grows, you know, like a green bay tree. I think we have fairly well cared for it. I trust it may always remain as efficient as it is now and may always keep out of the rut in which much of the public service is apt, and to contract the disease of dry rot.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not true that a considerable sum was asked as an additional appropriation for topographical survey?

Mr. CANNON. Fifty thousand dollars more was asked for that purpose.

Mr. LLOYD. Was any necessity shown for that $50,000 additional?

Mr. CANNON. That was for additional work, as we understood. The truth is there would be a demand for $1,000,000, if we would give it. They would take the amount and would do the work. But this service has grown quite rapidly; and after investigation your committee is of opinion that the amount recommended is sufficient. My friend knows that we must leave something for future generations to do.

Mr. LLOYD. Was there anything else for extension of the service? The gentleman sees the point I am trying to reach. What was it which the committee appropriated that would extend the service? The gentleman says that $50,000 was for additional expenditure in topography. I want to get at the amount they desired to expend which would expand the service.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think there was an estimate for an additional party to go to Alaska.

Mr. LLOYD. You have already provided for that?

Mr. CANNON. We have already three parties—

Mr. LLOYD. You have already provided for that, have you not?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but they want another one.

Mr. LLOYD. How much more money?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect; I think $20,000. It seemed to us that this matter might wait. This whole question can come up, however, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. LLOYD. All right.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I was not able to hear the whole statement of the gentleman from Illinois, because I was called out of the Hall. Therefore he will allow me to ask, Does this bill carry an appropriation for improvements in this District—for what is termed "beautifying Washington?"

Mr. CANNON. It carries the usual appropriation for the park system.

Mr. RUCKER. No extension—no increased amount?

Mr. CANNON. There is an increase of $70,000 for improvements on the Potomac Flats—the making of a roadway along the bank of the river adjacent to the Monument and extending of the wall where the bathing establishment is now.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill does not carry any appropriation for making these extensive improvements that we have been reading about in the papers?

Mr. CANNON. The parking system?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Nay, nay.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman spoke about the construction of a building for offices. That is practically useful, I suppose—needed?

Mr. CANNON. I believe the committee is of that opinion. I most certainly am.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman considers that much more necessary than the appropriation of large sums of money for the purpose of beautifying the city of Washington?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am satisfied that the first thing that ought to be done toward extending the public buildings in the city of Washington is to complete this Capitol according to the original design and make the improvements indicated.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. I believe the appropriations made for the improvement of this city must be borne one-half by the General Government and one-half by the city of Washington?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is not entirely so. We are trying to extend that principle—the principle of half and half.

Mr. RUCKER. Are there any appropriations here for public improvements—I do not mean Government improvements, but improvements of the city or District—of which the District does not pay half?

Mr. CANNON. We have upon this bill in many instances, especially in extending and improving the parks, succeeded in getting the appropriations made on the half-and-half principle. In regard to this improvement on the Potomac Flats we provide for payment half and half.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman believe that every improvement of that nature ought to be borne by the District?

Mr. CANNON. I do.

Mr. RUCKER. And none of them paid for in whole by the Government? Now, if the gentleman will kindly answer me, if he can. This half which is paid by the city or the District, of course, is raised by local taxation?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. There has been a good deal of discussion in the newspapers about the taxation of personal property here. Will the gentleman advise me as to whether personal property is taxed here?

Mr. CANNON. Practically, I understand not.

Mr. RUCKER. Then, does not the gentleman believe that before we appropriate another dollar for expenses, one-half of which the city ought to pay, that the city ought to be required to tax personal property?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that the newspapers say that the District Committees that have charge of legislation are considering that subject, and it has been announced that provisions to be recommended are about ready. Your Committee on Appropriations has delayed the preparation of its appropriation bill for the purpose of seeing whether or not such legislation would be enacted, and as one member of that committee I am not willing to provide for expenditures for improvements of the District proper except as the District contributes its quota.

Mr. RUCKER. Its half.

Mr. CANNON. And I trust before this bill is enacted—I mean the District bill that is to come later—that legislation under the lead of the District Committee of the House and of the District Committee of the Senate will provide for an increase of revenue. I trust that will be the case.

Mr. RUCKER. There is a proposition pending to make a loan of ten or fifteen millions of dollars to the District. Does that come before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. CANNON. No, that would not. That would involve legislation of which the District Committee of the House would have jurisdiction.

Mr. RUCKER. And not yours.

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment it is not necessary to make a loan. In my judgment if there was a fair assessment of the real estate of the District of Columbia that the revenues would be increased a million of dollars, say, or more, by reason of that fair assessment. Then if there was a fair assessment of the personal property of the District, of the capital stock of the various corporations, and the choses in action, substantially like such property is taxed in the States, in my judgment it would yield at least a million and a half of dollars of revenue. That would make two millions and a half, and two millions and a half increase, with a like amount added from the national Treasury, will do all the work that is desirable to be done in the District of Columbia, in my judgment, and as fast as it ought to be done without the borrowing of one cent.

Mr. RUCKER. Then it is the best policy of the Government to impose taxes on all the personalty and money, stock, bond, choses in action and force the District in that way to raise a part and the Government pay its part, rather than to loan.

Mr. CANNON. I have no doubt that the property of the District ought to be taxed for the benefit of the District revenues as it is taxed elsewhere.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman doubtless has seen in the papers that taxation of personal property might compel some rich gentlemen to leave the District.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know. It seems to me that if they should insist on going on that account I would fracture the Constitution for the purpose of hoisting a flag and hiring a band as they depart. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say that. I agree with him. One other proposition. If they do not go, the newspapers say they might be forced to commit perjury in order to hide their property. The newspapers here in Washington say that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I hardly think that is correct.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman understands me—

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe that any great block of people would commit perjury. Once in a while, for a great many centuries, individuals have lied, and I think where a man would tell a lie for gain he would probably swear to it, but I do not think that is the rule.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman understands me. I do not charge it, I merely say I saw it in the newspapers. I see that argument advanced that gentlemen here would commit perjury rather than pay taxes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we want to be lenient in our minds with our friends in the District. I do not mean that we want to fail to enact legislation, but they have just the same kind of people here that they have in every other capital, namely, people who desire to get the most they can at the expense of all of the people and bear as little burden at their own expense as possible.

Mr. RUCKER. I fully agree with what the gentleman has said about leniency to the people of the District of Columbia, but I think, also, that we ought to be fair with our people at home, and if in doing that we force some rich men to leave the city of Washington I would join the gentleman in hoisting the flag and hiring the band, and if they stay and violate the law let them be dealt with like any other man who violates the law.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe that many gentlemen of wealth—I do not believe that any gentleman of wealth—would leave the District of Columbia under just taxation; and now, to be candid, for fear I may have been misunderstood, I am very glad that any American citizen who sees proper to come to Washington to live should come. And it is no crime, in my eyes, for a man to be rich. I would stop just when I made him contribute his share, according to his property, for the public service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is there any law authorizing the taxation of personal assets now in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CANNON. None that is enforced, as I understand it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why is it not enforced? What is the trouble?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think probably that the machinery, as I understand it, is not provided for its enforcement, as is claimed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was a cog left out of the machinery.

Mr. CANNON. Probably a cog left out.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. A cog removed; not left out.

Mr. CANNON. A cog removed, says my colleague from Massachusetts, and I accept that statement, because he knows more about it than I do.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They have just ceased to collect.

Mr. CANNON. But it is our business to put the cog back.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; I agree with you. They took that cog out, and then kept entirely quiet and did not appeal to Congress to put the cog back; just went quietly along, and then finally said there was not any law authorizing the assessment of personal property, and asking us to tax our constituents the full half of all the expense, while they kept, perhaps, a full half off from the tax duplicate. That is about the way of it, as I understand.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is so alleged, and I think very likely that is correct.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And in the meantime the District of Columbia has become a haven of rest for those who dislike to pay taxes elsewhere; and they drift here and obtain a nominal residence, without paying any taxes here, and reporting themselves as nonresidents of the State from which they came.

Mr. CANNON. I fear that is the case; I do not know, but I suspect that is the case in many instances.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do not you think it would be a good cure for that to refuse to appropriate money until some system of taxation is enforced here that will equalize those assessed upon our own people?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, as Congress is the common council for the District, a better cure is that, knowing the evil, we apply the remedy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have endeavored as best I could to hear the colloquy between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] and the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago, and I assume that the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] stated that it was his desire as a member of the committee to see that the District of Columbia paid one-half of the expenses for the beautifying of the parks of the District, and that that was the principle involved in the appropriation contemplated for the improvement of the Potomac Flats beyond the Monument. I should like to ask the gentleman whether there is any improvement, of the general scope of the improvement of the Potomac Flats embodied in this bill, wherein that principle of having one-half of the expense paid by the District of Columbia is omitted?

Mr. CANNON. No; I think it is not omitted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman the amount of the appropriation beyond the Monument?

Mr. CANNON. Seventy thousand dollars.

Now, I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], who wishes to leave the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois has but four minutes remaining.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana ask to be recognized?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask to be recognized in my own time. I intend to use about ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If no one desires to address the committee in opposition, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana. If anyone desires to address the committee in opposition, he will be recognized.

Mr. BENTON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is a member of the committee and of the subcommittee. I am in charge of this side, and I have no objection to the gentleman from Indiana using such time as he desires. I intended to make a short statement myself, but I can do it afterwards. I think the gentleman is entitled to some time in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair always endeavors to alternate in recognizing gentlemen.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will state to the Chairman that if there is anyone who desires to be heard now, I will wait. I only want to use ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not often consume the time of this House by speaking, but I am so deeply interested in one item in this bill and in the legislation that I hope will speedily follow, that I feel it is my duty to urge upon Congress that we act and act promptly. I refer to the item of $200,000 to enforce the Chinese-exclusion law.

You ask why appropriate this money when this law expires by limitation May 5.

My answer is that the bill reported to this House from the Committee on Foreign Affairs or the one now pending in the Senate must be passed and become law before May 5 or this Congress will go into history as committing the greatest crime that has been committed by lack of legislation in many years. I urge that there be no longer delay, but that this legislation be enacted at once. Then the Department will find waiting the money now on hand from our last appropriation and $200,000 more that we appropriate by this bill, so that the safeguards that have been heretofore adopted and such other safeguards as are necessary to enforce the law and prevent Chinamen getting into this country may be carried into effect.

When the gentleman with smooth tongue, who wants cheap labor in order that his profits may be increased, urges that Chinese labor will do no harm, do not listen to him for a moment, but push him aside and tell him you stand for that great mass of American citizens who are earnestly striving to uphold the standard for the American wage-earner, and for his cottage home, for good clothing and food for his wife and children, and you have no use for the man who wants to degrade him and ruin his home and family by placing him in competition with Chinese labor. I believe in protection of American industries, but, my countryman, how much more important it is to protect our American wage-earner who has had so much to do with making this the greatest nation on earth. Then let us delay no longer. We have before us the bill reported from the committee of our own body.

No one can fail to see how well drawn it is, or how intelligently and conscientiously the original author of the bill and the committee have labored over it, and they deserve and will receive for their splendid work the thanks of their colleagues in both Houses of Congress, and not less the hearty thanks of the great public which has such a vital interest in the success of this all-important measure. If it is not perfect it can be amended.

I shall vote for this bill with the greatest pleasure, and I wish to do all that I can to promote its passage, believing as I do that it is not only for the interests of the American public—that is far too cold and colorless a phrase—but that it is absolutely essential for the continuance of our American institutions and civilization.

The original bill, as it came from the hands of the distinguished member from California, was strong and praiseworthy. The amendments have merely made it still stronger and more praiseworthy. I especially welcome the amendment which provides for keeping Chinese immigrants out of our insular possessions as well as out of our mainland. It has been repeatedly thrown in the teeth of the dominant party that it was proposing to allow Chinese labor to be made use of extensively in the Philippine and Hawaiian islands, so as to enable American manufacturers and capitalists to go to those islands and produce goods there by Chinese labor cheaper than we can produce them at home with American labor, and thus allow some of our own employers and producers to cut under our own prices and undermine the precious structure of American industry. This amendment fully meets and disproves all such allegations, and its necessity, on general principles, is evident. I am very glad it has been incorporated in the bill.

The bill is carefully drawn so as to do no injustice to anybody. No true American wishes to do injustice to any foreigner, be he European, African, or Asiatic. The bill amply provides for the rights and conveniences of Chinese entitled to enter or reside in this country—the Chinese laborers registered as residents, or the Chinese teachers, students, merchants, and travelers who may wish to enter and remain temporarily in the United States. There can be no complaint against the bill on this score. The gentlemen who have appeared before the committee in opposition to the bill, the gentlemen who are so desirous of increasing their profits in trading with China, say that they are not pleading the cause of coolie labor, that they do not object to the prohibition of Chinese labor in this country. Then why do they object to this bill?

They say all they care about is to make sure that Chinese teachers and merchants are not interfered with. Wherein does this bill interfere? But they say it will make China angry and so injure their trade with China. Why should it make China angry? The Chinese Government and the higher classes of the Chinese people can not blame us for not wanting to have millions of coolies dumped into our country to vitiate our civilization and to swamp our labor market. There is no objection on our part to the coming here of Chinese teachers, students, merchants, and travelers on legitimate business and in a legitimate manner, and the only reason why their entrance is hedged about with the formalities and restrictions enumerated in the bill is in order that we may guard our country against the entrance of laborers under false pretenses in the guise of students, merchants, etc., which has been so great and so frequent an abuse in the past.

Why, then, should the Chinese Government or the Chinese privileged classes complain of the bill? And how can the bill injure our Chinese trade? There is nothing in this objection of the opposition. It is a mere scarecrow.

But I hasten to say that even if the passage of the bill should offend China seriously, and even if it should cost us every dollar of our Chinese trade, that would be infinitely better than for the bill to fail and not to become a law. What is the favor of China and what is the value of our Chinese trade compared with the degradation and ruin of our American labor? At all hazards, Mr. Chairman, and whatever else may or may not happen, Chinese cheap labor must and shall be kept out of this country. It is a terrible misfortune that so much of it has already been admitted. Not another single solitary Chinese laborer should be permitted ever to set foot on American soil. The Chinese may consider it a signal evidence of mercy and forbearance on our part that we have conceded so much to them already.

They come over here as foreigners, to remain foreigners, and living in holes and hovels and swarming like vermin, underbidding and crowding out our laborers, getting all the money they can from us and spending none of it, incurring none of our civic obligations, keeping aloof from our civilization, adopting none of our ways, introducing their own filthy ways, and contaminating the moral and physical atmosphere with their rotten and pestiferous practices. They are unlike all other immigrants. They are not wanted here, and must stay away.

This is a most serious question, Mr. Chairman, from the standpoint of American labor. No more serious question has ever come up for settlement, and none more serious ever could come up. Our American laboring men and women are subjected to a quite severe enough competition among themselves at best. The rewards and returns of labor are scanty enough at best and under natural conditions. But what rewards and returns can Anglo-Saxon labor hope for if subjected to competition with Asiatics who can and do live on 2 cents' worth of rice a day? This is the practical question connected with this bill.

It is a question whether we shall keep up the standards of life in the ranks of American labor, and strive to continue to elevate those standards or deliberately degrade them to the Chinese level. How can any true-hearted American contemplate the latter alternative without horror? But this would infallibly and inevitably be the result, unless the rigid exclusion of Chinese laborers decreed by this bill is maintained.

The injury already done to American labor on the Pacific coast, and to a considerable extent all over the country, by Chinese labor has been very great. There is no telling how many Chinese there are in our far West. The census is entirely unreliable on that point, simply because the Chinese hide and skulk and evade enumeration and identification as much as possible. There are over 50,000 of them in San Francisco alone, and they swarm all over the Pacific and Mountain States. They have practically monopolized the labor field in the Alaska fisheries, and in the Pacific States they have driven to the wall our American working men and women in the lines of household service, cigar making, boot and shoe making, bag making, tailoring, laundering, farming, brick making, mine working, and railroad working, not to speak of many other industries.

But I need not tell over again this old familiar tale of how our honest, brave American working men and women on the frontier have been wounded thus in the house of their friends. The workingmen of the United States—the backbone of this country—stand as a unit, shoulder to shoulder, on this question. They may differ as to other questions, but they are unanimous in their appreciation of this one great overshadowing peril and menace.

At the last convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Scranton, Pa., in a report of the executive officers, the plea was made for the extension of law for exclusion of Chinese, and they said, in part:

Apart from the fact that we are workingmen, we are also American citizens, fully imbued with the grand principles underlying our form of government and our present system of civilization. The introduction or continuance of an element so entirely at variance with our economic, political, social, and moral conceptions, and so utterly incapable of adaptation to the Caucasian ideas of civilization, is not only dangerous to us as a class but is destructive of the various institutions we are so earnestly striving to uphold, maintain, or attain. Whatever may be the opinion of others, to us this matter does not permit a compromise.

Chinese exclusion is an issue upon which all organized labor is a unit.

The hearthstone of the American citizen is in danger.

Every incoming coolie means the displacement of an American and the lowering of the American standard of living.

It represents so much money sent out of the country.

So much more vice and immorality injected into our social life in its place. We can not afford to trifle with a race of people so utterly unassimilative, so ruinous to our general prosperity, and so blighting to our every prospect.

Comparison with immigration of other peoples is only possible by contrast. While we object to an indiscriminate influx of other foreign laborers, we maintain that discrimination in the case of Chinese immigrants is impossible.

We insist upon an exclusion act which will effectively exclude. Provision must be made for proper enforcement of the law when enacted, and the jurisdiction and execution of the law so conferred as to remove it from the legal juggling to which former laws have been subject.

In this plea all organized labor of this country join and urge us to act. You ask that proper provision be made for the enforcement of the law when enacted. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that I have the honor to serve as a member of the committee that today reports an appropriation of $200,000 to be used in addition to the amount now on hand for that purpose.

This is not a matter affecting the Pacific States alone. Even if it were, that would be a sufficient reason for enacting this measure. But unless the bars are put up strongly and permanently against this Chinese invasion they will overwhelm not only our West, but also our whole country. There are 400,000,000 of them, one-third of the population of the whole earth. What, with their enormous numbers, their capacity for hard work, and their ability to live on almost nothing, they constitute in sober earnest the most deadly peril of Western and Christian civilization to-day. Our only safety, Mr. Chairman, consists in shutting them out and keeping them out. This is what this bill proposes to do, and that is why I am in favor of it. I trust sincerely that the bill will be passed and become law at the earliest possible date, and before the 1st day of May. [Applause.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I will not take up much time on this bill. Before I say anything about the provisions of this bill I desire, in answer to some inquiries of my colleague from Missouri, to discuss now for a moment and to make an explanation on District matters. The Subcommittee on Appropriations having in charge the District bill convened ten weeks ago with the intention of having hearings and reporting the bill for the District to Congress; and if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had asked for the ordinary amount of money the bill perhaps would have been out of the Senate before this time. The Commissioners came in, and their recommendations covered something like ten and a half millions of dollars.

On investigating the amount of revenue which the District could raise by taxation on the subjects of taxation which had heretofore been used, we found that three and a half million dollars was about all they raised in the District by taxation, and under a former statute, the Government appropriating the same amount, that it aggregated about $7,000,000, and more than that would be outside of our authority to appropriate. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations called the Commissioners together and insisted to them that while their recommendations for the interests of the District were probably correct, yet in view of the fact that we were only authorized to appropriate so much as they raised by taxation, that we preferred to defer the taking up and passing the appropriation bill for the District until they had made some efforts through the proper committees of this House and at the other end of the Capitol, to wit, the Committees on the District of Columbia, to raise by taxation a sufficient amount of money that would authorize us to appropriate more money than we had appropriated in bills heretofore.

So that the Committee on Appropriations or its subcommittee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill have waited to see what would be done, because it is our determination—and I believe the full committee will indorse the feeling of the subcommittee—not to appropriate any more money than double the amount the District raises by taxation. The question was raised in the District subcommittee two years ago as to why personal property was not taxed in the District of Columbia. It was intimated to us very broadly that it was the desire of the citizenship of the District to invite gentlemen of wealth to come here and make homes, indicating to them that if they would build a fine home here they would be taxed reasonably on their real property and that their personal property would escape taxation.

In other words, it was an apparent bid to bring wealth here on the suggestion, if not the promise, that it would not be taxed. We know something of the necessities of the District when we know what sort of water we have been drinking, and we know that a filtration plant ought to be made for the District, costing about a million of dollars. We were just as anxious to meet the requirements of the District as the Commissioners were, but we were just as determined, so far as our committee was concerned, that something ought to be done looking toward the taxation of personality and real property in the District in some manner that would be nearer its worth than in the past, and it is because we desire those things done that the District bill has not been reported.

Mr. RUCKER. Can the gentleman inform us when the District appropriation bill will be reported?

Mr. BENTON. We have no information at all to give, because we would rather await the action of Congress as to whether they would authorize taxation of personal property. The Committee on Appropriations, all of them, and I know distinctly that I would not want to agree to issue bonds or a loan. We would rather they would raise the money by taxation.

Mr. RUCKER. You say that you would rather that the District raise the money than issue bonds?

Mr. BENTON. I will not vote for the issuance of bonds at all.

Mr. RUCKER. Has a bill been introduced in the Senate taxing personal property in this District?

Mr. BENTON. I think so.

Mr. RUCKER. As I learn through the papers, everything that relates to District legislation is referred to the Commissioners of the District for their revision and modification.

Mr. BENTON. That is not true so far as the appropriations are concerned. We revise and often modify their estimates.

Mr. RUCKER. I only make that statement based on newspaper reports.

Mr. BENTON. It may be that the District Commissioners are advised with by the Committee on the District of Columbia. They are advised with by us. They make their estimates and we revise them afterwards.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield.

Mr. BENTON. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that is, during the investigation upon this subject that you have referred to, was there any information furnished your committee as to the probable number of millions of property that escaped taxation in the District because of the failure to tax personal property?

Mr. BENTON. Not that I might put in the RECORD as certain, though I have a very fair idea.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would the gentleman object to stating it?

Mr. BENTON. I think from the best estimate I could make it would reach $250,000,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not now taxed?

Mr. BENTON. That is the best estimate that I can make.

Mr. RUCKER. Is that $250,000,000 personal or real estate?

Mr. BENTON. Both.

Mr. RUCKER. What part of it is personal?

Mr. BENTON. More than one-half; probably two-thirds.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman. Appropriate to the matter now occupying the gentleman's attention and which he has discussed, I only want to call to his attention one case. This is a matter not only interesting to the people of the District of Columbia, but to the people throughout the whole country. An instance came to my attention within a year and a half or two years prior to this time where a resident of the District had his hundred and some odd thousand dollars loaned out in a single county in the State of Indiana, but he pays no taxes in the District and he pays no taxes in Indiana. I hope if the gentleman has the power he will have the disposition to correct that evil in providing for taxation of personal property in the District.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have no time to yield. The gentleman from Missouri yielded to me.

Mr. BENTON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Does not the gentleman know as a matter of common report that a great many millionaires have moved to Washington to dodge taxation of personal property?

Mr. BENTON. I do not know it. It would be a mere matter of opinion if I said yes. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to defer any discussion of this matter until the District bill came before us.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri will allow me, is it not true that the Committee on Appropriations has nothing to do with enacting the law under which taxes are assessed?

Mr. BENTON. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That matter belongs to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BENTON. It belongs to the committee that has legislation in charge. We only appropriate what we have got in sight; and I believe the Committee on Appropriations is of one mind on that subject, and that is that the property in the District of Columbia ought to be assessed at a fair valuation, whether it is real or personal, as it is in the States.

Mr. KEHOE. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me for a question?

Mr. BENTON. Certainly.

Mr. KEHOE. According to the fair value of property, which is of the greater value, the property of the Government or the property of the individuals in the District?

Mr. BENTON. The property of the individuals, clearly. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word to members on this side of the House about this bill that is before us. The subcommittee of appropriations on the sundry civil bill had the benefit of the long experience of the chairman of the committee in its investigation. We were about this bill three weeks, and I believe we made as good a bill as we could under the circumstances.

I have been asked the question sometimes by members of Congress, privately, why certain appropriations are larger than would appear to be necessary from the day-to-day expenditures. My answer to that is this: Whenever we appropriate money it is to be in accordance with established law. If we appropriate at any time what seems to be large sums or unnecessary sums, it is not the fault of the Committee on Appropriations. It comes from legislation which Congress has already enacted, which makes continuing appropriations necessary.

Now, this is a very representative and a very fair bill. It appropriates nearly $13,000,000 less than the last bill. Of course, we do not think for a moment that we are going to get it through Congress in any such condition. This bill as presented here appropriates $12,500,000 less than the current fiscal year, and is, in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations, what is necessary, and at least fairly liberal; but when the bill is made up and is settled in conference my opinion is that it will be as large as the current law.

But the bill as presented by the Committee on Appropriations is in their opinion amply sufficient for the purposes for which the appropriations are made. Just one other point. There appears to be a considerable increase in one item to which I called the chairman's attention, and that is for the finishing up of the work in the Yellowstone Park. Your committee were of the opinion that one of two things ought to be done: Either we ought to quit the park entirely, or finish up the public work and make the roads through it, put them in good state of preservation—and we decided to do it. It is not in the opinion of the committee extravagant, but if we are going to hold the park, it is a work of necessity. One word about the proposed building for use of members. I think that it should be the first of the proposed buildings in this city. I stand ready to vote for the appropriation when it is offered in the House. Mr. Chairman, I now yield an hour to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL].

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in the unfortunate condition of being compelled to talk about measures that are not before this House. I have rarely, if ever, done such a thing before, and I very much regret it now; but, from the condition of the House itself and its peculiar workings, if any member of this House desires to discuss any great question that comes before it he must do it either prior to the hearing or after the bill has actually passed this body.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment one of the most, if not the most, important questions that is before the American people to-day, or should be before the American people, is to recover the House of Representatives from the low condition in which it has fallen.

Sir, we may shut our eyes as much as we will, but it is in everybody's mouth to-day, whether Democrat, Republican, Prohibitionist, or whoever he may be, that the House of Representatives signifies nothing in the American régime of government. A few days ago I was very much impressed by finding a Republican newspaper from the great State of Pennsylvania, one from the great State of California, and one from the District of Columbia sounding this warning at one and the same time. I want to read a little of these opinions, and I will begin with the Washington Post of this city:

One reason, doubtless, why Representatives are so anxious to be Senators is that the House has ceased to be a deliberative body, but is controlled by a junta that dictates what shall and what shall not be done, while the Senate is preeminently a deliberative body of 90 ambassadors from half as many sovereign Commonwealths. As far as deliberation is concerned, the House that was presided over by GALUSHA A. GROW was as different from the House that is presided over by DAVID B. HENDERSON as the Roman senate that offered for public sale the ground on which was encamped Hannibal's victorious army differed from the Roman senate that confirmed the purchase of the imperial purple. It will not always be so. The mutterings and murmurings presage the coming of a storm that none can resist.

That is from a paper published in our midst, that watches you and watches me and watches these proceedings every day. About the same day from San Francisco comes this editorial:

The leaders of the House of Representatives appear in the curious attitude of persons bent upon the destruction of their own importance. Absolute power over the presentation, discussion, and amendment of measures has been given to the Speaker and the Committee on Rules; and this coterie of less than half a dozen men entirely dominates all proceedings in the House of Representatives. It decides what shall be considered, for how long, and by whom; and the precise force of any measure is determined in advance.

Deliberation under this method of procedure comes out of the question, and discussion sinks to the level of mere mechanical utterance, so far as it affects the House of Representatives. Such a deliberate self-abasement of a great legislative body is without a parallel in the history of the world. It is the Senate—sometimes called "the Millionaires' Club"—which now deliberates and legislates, and the country recognizes the fact, whilst the House itself concedes it. It has become the one branch of Congress which now regularly determines the course and character of deliberation. No issue is now ever joined with it and no fight ever made against it. The fate that has now well-nigh overtaken the House is a singular one in so great a Republic and well worthy of the study of the political philosopher.

A few days ago in a bunch of the bright newspaper men gathered at this capital, one who had been here over twenty years advocating Republicanism stood in his place and said: "A few years ago every principal newspaper man in Washington crowded into the House of Representatives; the inferior ones stayed in the Senate. But," said he, "to-day no experienced newspaper man ever cares anything about the House of Representatives. It is no longer considered a deliberative body." And a Republican of national reputation, whose position is in the other Chamber, said: "Yes; you may talk about the deleterious effects of the steel trust; you may talk about the injuries of the railroad trusts; you may talk about the injuries of the sugar trust; but I will tell you the most dangerous trust in America to-day is the legislative trust that is placed in a few hands in the House of Representatives and is breaking down all of the powers and the principles upon which it was built."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want this morning to talk about the three financial bills that have been reported to this House or approved by the Republican members. And why do I bring this question before the House at this hour? It is because you know and because I know that there has not been a question upon which parties differed in principle for years that has been debated or that has been permitted to be debated on this floor. We are begged to debate when some matter of no importance is up. We are deprived of debate, we are deprived of the opportunity of amendment, we are deprived of discussion when a great question comes up in this forum for final consideration.

When the bill to strike down the sugar industry of this country, which will come before us in a few days, you will see it put through with whip and spur; and no man who is interested in that great question will be permitted to amend that bill or discuss it. Therefore we are forced prematurely to come here and say what we wish to say about these questions before the proper time, or after it, or not at all. But, thank God, we can ask the sugar growers of twenty States what they think of a party that takes the tariff off the things they produce at the dictation of a gigantic sugar trust and leaves it on everything they buy. We can hang out the insignia of the astute General Dick: "Here is our free trade for the farmer and here is the protection for the sugar trust." We shall also try to find some way to inform them that we were gagged and could not debate or offer an amendment. In my judgment we have now pending before this body three of the most dangerous bills, taking them together, that ever were presented before this body in the history of this Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I remind the gentleman that he has failed to call the attention of the House and the country to the responsibility of the Republican party for the condition that prevails here with reference to the rules and the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BELL. The country knows who is responsible for that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Democratic party for a number of years past has been charged as being currency "tinkerers." We had a great campaign on what the politicians on the stump called the silver question. I never discussed it from that standpoint in this body or upon the stump. Nobody that ever understood our side of the question ever discussed it in this body or on the stump as the silver question. We all realized that the point at issue was not whether you should have silver, or gold, or paper. The issue was shall we have an abundance of Government money issued and controlled by the Government for all the people or bank paper controlled by the banks for the banks.

The historian Hume says:

In every kingdom into which money begins to flow in greater abundance than formerly everything takes on a new face for greater prosperity.

Henri Cernuschi, the eminent French financier, says:

The value of money depends upon its quantity. The purchasing power is always in relation to its quantity.

The political economist Ricardo says:

That commodities would rise and fall in price in proportion to the increase or diminution of money, I assume as a fact that is incontrovertible.

The whole philosophy of the silver question is that gold, silver, and paper issued by the Government is safer than mere bank promises to pay, of which we now have $300,000,000 in our circulation, and an effort is now being made to double it.

The following bill is put forth as the Republican idea of a financial panacea, with a unanimous report of Republican members, viz:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to coin the silver bullion in the Treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into such denominations of subsidiary silver coin as he may deem necessary to meet public requirements, and thereafter, as public necessities may demand, to recoin silver dollars into subsidiary coin; and so much of any act as fixes a limit to the aggregate of subsidiary silver coin outstanding, and so much of any act as directs the coinage of any portion of the bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, is hereby repealed.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to maintain at all times at parity with gold the legal-tender silver dollars remaining outstanding; and to that end he is hereby directed to exchange gold for legal-tender silver dollars when presented to the Treasury in the sum of $5 or any multiple thereof; and all provisions of law for the use or maintenance of the reserve fund in the Treasury relating to United States notes are, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, hereby made applicable to the exchange of legal-tender silver dollars.

The question at issue still is whether you should have money issued by the Government in full and necessary quantity or whether you should leave it to the banks of the country to issue the money and contract or expand it at will. Now, our contention and the pith of the contention of all of the so-called silver men has ever been based upon the quantitative theory of money. We have always contended and now contend, and the Republican party now agrees with us, that we must keep up an equilibrium between the amount of property to be exchanged and the amount of money with which to make those exchanges, and therefore we, in common with all the economists who have gone before us, including our Secretaries of the Treasury from time to time, have said that all these panics have been occasioned by the scarcity and not by the abundance of money; and I lay down another proposition, that in no case has there been a question raised as to the form of the money in times of panic, but in every case the clamor has been for money of any kind or any quality whatever.

You will generally find in one of these measures a small amount of good, a mere crumb for the people, and it climaxes with the colossal lion's share shuffled into the already bursting coffers of the money changers.

This bill provides for the very proper raise of the limit of subsidiary coin from $100,000,000 to $120,000,000. This subsidiary coin does not invade the domain of the national-bank notes or bonds, hence this comforting crumb is cheerfully extended to the masses of the people.

In 1900 the limit of subsidiary coin in the United States was $80,000,000. Owing to the great increase of our bank currency and gold coinage, together with the new trade coming from our own consumption and also the new trade from England for her Boer war, we were required to raise the limit on our divisional or minor coins from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000 to accommodate our greatly increased domestic trade. Our great and increasing coining of gold and our increased trade continues, and the Director of the Mint has requested an additional raise of the limit of our subsidiary coins of $20,000,000 more, to $120,000,000—equaling the astonishing increase of 50 per cent in our necessity for small change in the space of two years.

It is commendable that this requirement is supplied in the bill. The very fact that we now require 50 per cent more small change than we did before these wars, before our marvelous crops at home and the great droughts abroad, and before the mighty stimulus given to trade by the enormous increase in our gold coinage and the great increase in our per capita circulation, establishes the pressing necessity for a like increase in our general currency. Does this bill provide for such an increase or permit the natural increase now going on? Nay, verily; but, on the contrary, it seeks to shrink the volume of real money in the enormous sum of over $500,000,000, or to the extent of our present amount of coined silver dollars. But, say the authors of this ungenerous shuffle of the wealth of the people into the pockets of the bankers and bondholders, "We do not destroy the silver dollar; we simply enable the people to take it to the Treasury and convert it into gold." My dear sirs, the people do not want to convert it into gold, and you know it. That means that you purpose to convert a silver dollar into a mere order to pay it in gold, or reduce our real money to the amount of your gold stock. Under the law a holder may now take gold to the Treasury, deposit it, and receive gold certificates for it. At any future time he can return the gold certificates and get back the gold coin. All of this time, however, the Treasury must keep the gold in the vaults for the payment of the certificate.

This act, if passed, would not only leave the outstanding certificate above described against the gold dollar, but every one of the 500,000,000 and odd silver dollars would be converted into gold certificates, redeemable in the exact manner as gold certificates are redeemable, and would put $2 in certificates for each gold dollar for its redemption.

We now hold in the Treasury continually $150,000,000 in gold to secure the redemption of probably $335,000,000 greenbacks (nominally $346,000,000, but with destruction and loss there is nothing approaching $346,000,000) and Treasury notes. This great sum of unused money in the hands of the people at the low rate of 3 per cent would be worth $9,000,000 per annum.

If this bill should pass what would be the result? At the very next session of Congress the "currency tinkers" would be here backed by the great banking interests of the world and a subservient press demanding that the gold reserve be raised to $300,000,000 to secure the payment of the silver dollars in gold. They will get it, as they have everything else they have demanded in modern times, and there will be piled up in the Treasury, or more probably in the national banks, idle money to the amount of $300,000,000, worth, at 3 per cent, $9,000,000.

The "currency tinkers" for the past forty years have worked in and out of season for the banking and bondholding interests alone, and these especially favored ones have made untold millions out of these machinations, and in every instance in the inverse ratio the laborers and general producers have been plundered.

Many times during the existence of this Government we have had financial panics, every one of which is attributable to the shrinkage or limitation of the power of the currency, or to the "tinkers" with the currency. No panic has ever passed away without a pathetic trail of devastation among debtors, ordinary producers, and laborers which was heartrending. But few panics, if any, have ever visited any country that the great bond and mortgage holding and the great banking portion of the people were not financially benefited. The small banks and the small financial institutions have always been caught in the wreckage. The great panic of 1837 occurred during Van Buren's Administration, and is rightly attributed to a tinkering with the currency. Daniel Webster ascribed the panic to the interference of the Government with the currency, and to what was known as the "specie circular," requiring all public lands to be paid for in specie.

On May 10, 1837, all of the banks of New York suspended payment, and devastation and wreckage of values were rife everywhere except among the powerful money-owning and money-lending institutions of the country that defied the public and the people by suspending payment.

Prof. W. G. Sumner, of Yale, in his History of American Currency, states that nearly all of the banks made money out of the suspension and paid big dividends during the year.

The panic of 1857 was brought on largely by the "tinkers" with currency in Congress. Prior to 1857 all of the gold coins and most of the silver coins of foreign nations were full legal tender in the United States. Gold had been overvalued by an act of Congress, and in consequence great quantities of foreign gold accumulated in the United States, and much of it was held as bank reserves, was of light weight, and was depreciated in bullion value. In February, 1857, Congress demonetized all foreign coins without supplying anything to fill the vacuum. The coins were usually of such light weight that they could not be profitably converted into American coins, were exported never to return, which brought on the panic and spread ruin again to all classes except the owners of bonds, mortgages, and ready money. The shrinkage in the volume of the currency greatly enhanced the value of ready money and gilt-edged bonds and securities, and in an inverse ratio depreciated the value of labor and of all other property, to the ruin of producers and laborers.

The awful panic of 1873 was brought on by the currency "tinkers," who persistently demanded the unnecessary retirement of the great volume of greenbacks without providing anything to fill their places. In a speech in the Senate, January 27, 1869, when the currency "tinkers" were strenuously demanding a more rapid retirement of the greenback, Hon. John Sherman, before he became a great bank-stock investor and when he was known throughout the country as plain, honest John Sherman, said:

It is not possible to take this voyage without the sorest distress. To every person except a capitalist out of debt or a salaried officer or annuitant it is a period of loss, danger, lassitude of trade, fall of wages, suspension of enterprise, bankruptcy, and disaster, and it means the ruin of dealers whose debts are twice their business capital, though one-third less than their actual property. It means the fall of all agricultural productions without any great reduction of taxes. When that day comes all enterprise will be suspended, every bank will have contracted its currency to the lowest limit, and the debtor, compelled to meet in coin a debt contracted in currency, will find the coin hoarded in the Treasury, no representative of coin in circulation, his property shrunk, not only to the extent of the depreciation of the currency, but still more by the artificial scarcity made by the holders of gold.

He declared that the proposed retirement of the greenback to the extent proposed "would be an act of folly without an example in evil in modern times." (Cong. Globe, 1869, p. 629.)

Notwithstanding all of the timely warning, the currency "tinkers" never ceased until they brought on that awful panic of 1873, that reduced labor to idleness and want and pauperized the debtors all over this land, and enriched those solvent money, bond, and mortgage holders by a forced conveyance of the property of the debtors into the hands of the capitalistic classes at from 25 per cent to 50 per cent of its true value.

When the financial skies began to clear in 1874 and honest men with sad hearts began to view the spectacle and to right the true causes of the lamentable disaster, ruin, and misery which it had left in its trail, Hon. John A. Logan, March 17, 1874, graphically, and with a sad heart, said upon the floor of the United States Senate:

But, sir, that the panic (1873) was not due to the character of the currency is proved by the history of the panic itself. * * * No, sir, the panic was not attributable to the character of the currency, but to a money famine, and to nothing else. In the very midst of the panic we saw the leading bankers and business men of New York pressing and urging the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to let loose twenty or twenty-five millions more of the same paper for their relief. * * * Why is it that Representatives forget the interests of their own section and stand up here as the advocates of the gold brokers and money lenders and sharks, the same class of men whose tables Christ turned over and whom He lashed out of the temple at Jerusalem. Sir, turn this matter as we will and look at it from any side whatever, and it does present the appearance of being a stupendous scheme of the money holders to seize the opportunity of placing under their control the vast industries of the nation. Therefore, I warn Senators against pushing too far the great conflict now going on between capital and labor.

The diabolical panic of 1893, properly designated as the "bankers' panic," was the most unnecessary and cruel thing that was ever precipitated upon an innocent and confiding people. This, too, was brought on by the pestiferous currency "tinkers." Senator Sherman and others had sounded the alarm by stating in the Senate that the present national banking system would soon go out of existence, because the Government bonds would be paid off, leaving no basis for a national-bank circulation. The national bankers got together, concluded to have the purchasing clause of the Sherman act repealed and thereby stop the issue of Treasury notes monthly for silver purchasers; stop the coinage of silver and force a bank-note currency and an issue of long-time interest-bearing bonds upon the people, for banking purposes.

The National Bankers' Association issued a confidential circular letter to the bankers throughout the United States, telling them that Senator Sherman would introduce a bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, for them to see their member of Congress immediately curtail loans and circulation of bank notes for a time, and they could secure the passage of the bill. A crusade of intimidation and currency squeeze was begun that drove the people to hoarding, the banks and business men to withdrawing credits, culminating in the most disastrous panic that ever cursed this nation.

Robert Ingersoll, the great campaigner of the Republican party, immediately christened it the "bankers' panic." He said:

This is a bankers' panic. They have been predicting a panic for years, and have done all they could to fulfill the prediction.

Senator David B. Hill, of New York, from their very midst, and contemporaneous with the panic, declared it the bankers' legitimate offspring. From the floor of the United States Senate he said:

With ghoulish glee they welcomed every bank failure, especially in the silver States, little dreaming that such failures would soon occur at their own doors. They encouraged the hoarding of money; they inaugurated the policy of refusing loans to the people, even upon the best security; they circulated false propositions; passed absurd and alarming resolutions; predicted the direst disaster; attacked the credit of the Government; sought to exact a premium on currency, and attempted in every way to spread distrust broadcast throughout the land. The best organized financial system in the world could not stand such an organized and vicious attack upon it. These disturbers, these promoters of the public peril, represent largely the creditor class.

This panic was not caused by any objection among the people to any form of money. The Secretary of the Treasury showed at the time that the people generally had lost confidence in the banks and were drawing out and hoarding their money, but without complaint accepted silver, silver certificates, Treasury notes, greenbacks, or bank notes. The very silver dollars that the bankers feigned to fear went to a premium in New York of $2.50 per thousand during the panic.

If the customs of some members of this House do not cease, in the early morning of this bright, new century the deadly upas of another blighting panic will lie at the doors of the pestiferous "currency tinkers," done in the interests of the cormorants that have already confiscated the wealth of the nation through cunningly throwing the people into inextricable complications. Whether these alert gentlemen bring this about unwittingly or premeditatedly, the direful effects will be equally excruciating.

Mr. SIBLEY. What was the date of that circular?

Mr. BELL. It was in August, 1893.

Now, sir, the Secretary of the Treasury in his last report speaks of this awful panic. He says practically the same thing about the instability of banks in panicky times. Secretary Gage, on page 76, in speaking of the panic of 1893, says:

We have not far to look to see this well illustrated. The panic of 1893 is a marked example. Within a period of less than twelve months bank credits (deposits) were contracted to a total of more than $400,000,000—while the actual cash holdings of the banks were increased by nearly $50,000,000.

Think of it—

Think of it. The banks increased their own money in their vaults $50,000,000 within twelve months and withdrew $400,000,000 in credits during the panic of 1893.

That is to say a volume of bank credits before available for transfer in the ordinary channels of trade was suddenly diverted to the payment of pre-existing indebtedness from the public to the banks. This is shown by the fact that "loans and discounts" were reduced during the period to an amount substantially corresponding to the fall in deposits.

These bills, if passed, mean the destruction of over $500,000,000 of silver in the United States. It not only means that, but it means the contraction of the currency when the population of this country is growing more rapidly than ever before during its history, increasing the population, doubling the wealth, and cutting down the money supply. The Secretary of the Treasury calls attention to the fact that there must be an increase in the currency, for the purpose of expanding, for the benefit of this new population, and he suggests that there should be at least an expansion of $300,000,000, but he suggests bank paper.

Now they have introduced and reported a second bill as bad as the first. It takes in all the propositions of the first except the exchange of gold for silver. Now, then, I come to the third bill, known as the banking bill, the most infamous and dangerous bill ever introduced in this House or in the other Chamber, and I will not forego or except any other bills in their radical tendency that were ever introduced anywhere. This so-called banking bill means the absolute slavery of every industry in this country. Have you thought of it; have you looked at it? But let us see what this bill is and what it proposes to do. The first object is to create a division of banking and currency—three good, fat offices with salaries of $7,500 per annum. Very good so far as it goes. They are to hold office for twelve years. A nice berth!

What else does it provide? It provides that these men will assume the redemption of one hundred and thirty million of these outstanding notes, although so much deprecated; that they shall issue banking currency on their capital stock to their full value finally. They start in by gradations of 10 per cent one year, 10 per cent another year, and 10 per cent another year, and they finally get up to the point where they set aside all the paper currency issued by the Government, as good as the Government that issues it, and then it must be followed with banking paper issued by these gentlemen, not on United States bonds, but it must be issued on the capital stock, and not only be issued on the capital stock, but the Secretary of the Treasury asks the Government to refuse further to guarantee these notes. Let the people go.

Now, my friends, we are going very rapidly. Since this banking system was organized, in 1865, there has been 404 failures of national banks. But these national banks could not issue circulation except up to 90 per cent of the bonds underlying them, and yet the people of the United States have had 404 of these banks fail, and up to the end of last year people have been deprived of over $40,000,000 of their hard-earned money by the failure of these banks, when they had only the right of issuing circulation up to 90 per cent of their United States bonds.

In 1900, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, there were over 100 national banks in the hands of receivers, and yet in March, 1900, we gave them the right to issue circulation up to the full par value of their bonds. We allowed them to issue 10 per cent more currency than before, notwithstanding 404 of these institutions had gone under since 1865.

They cleaned up last year and put, I think it was, 26 out of business, with a loss to the people of over $1,000,000. I want to show you the danger. As I have contended often before, this Government never intended that a professional banker should be at the head of the Treasury Department. The national-bank law requires now that certain officers of the Government who deal with imports and exports shall not be an importer or exporter, and neither shall they have stock in any concern while holding one of the lower positions—I believe it is one of the officers represented under and appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury—and it created great comment when Secretary McCulloch was put in at the head of the Treasury in war times.

Bankers are as good as other men. The banker looks at finance from one standpoint, he studies it from one standpoint, and the political economist studies it from another. What do we have? Prior to the present Secretary of the Treasury, we had a man who was at the time of his appointment, as I remember, the president of the National Bankers' Association of the United States, and he asks in his report that we turn this Government soul and body over to the bankers of the United States.

Now, there is no guessing about that, and yet he shows the utter inefficiency of the banks. At page 74 of his recent report he says:

The function and office of a bank is to give its money obligations in exchange for the money obligations of its customers and dealers. This is the business the bank chiefly prosecutes.

He shows that there is but little money handled by banks; that they sell their credit and they lend their credit, and he demonstrates it here, and he goes on to say:

This is made plain by a glance at the reports furnished by the banks to the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. At the period of their last report the national banks, as a whole, held obligations against the public to an amount in excess of $3,018,000,000.

Think of it! now, $3,018,000,000, while the public enjoyed a total of credits upon the books of the banks to an amount in excess of $3,044,000,000.

That was $800,000,000 more than all the money there is in the United States. They had credits on their books, supposed to be on deposit, of $3,018,000,000, or $800,000,000 more than all the money in the United States. The Secretary logically says that they do not deal in money, but they simply lend their credit to the individual. Now, what does he want us to do? He says the banking laws are not made for storm; they are made only for fair weather, and he tells us that the banking facilities will not take care of the public in a storm, but it will in fair weather.

Now, what does he want done? He wants you to give over to the banks full power to issue and control all paper money.

I want to show you where the Secretary of the Treasury himself admits and warns us that the banks will not take care of us whenever we have trouble. It is all right in clear weather. Says the Secretary of the Treasury:

No sooner do the symptoms of financial and business trouble appear than the banks, under the rule of self-preservation, suspend to the farthest limit possible their operations of loaning and discounting. They cease to give credit on their books in exchange for debt obligations from their dealers. The daily creation of the necessary medium of exchange—banking credits—ceases or becomes entirely inadequate to the commercial requirements.

The daily natural liquidation of credits continues, resulting in contraction. Business men carrying goods and securities, by aid of the bank credit, are obliged to sell with little regard to cost. Contemplated enterprises are abandoned; orders for future delivery of goods are rescinded. And as these successive steps mark the downward movement, the banker becomes the more reluctant to perform his important function of loaning his credits for commercial and industrial uses.

We thus perceive that the bracing support which had prompted and sustained business progress, without which indeed such progress would have been impossible, is withdrawn at the very moment when the supply is the most needed.

That is the position we take. Your banks are all right in fair weather; in storm they help the crisis.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BELL. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not want to interrupt the line of the gentleman's argument, but I do want to ask some questions in regard to one matter which I find in this bill.

Mr. BELL. I do not want to discuss the bill now. For the present I want to consume my time on other questions. I hope the gentleman will excuse me.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury contends that we have not money enough, notwithstanding that the bank bill that I have been reading provides that the silver coinage shall be stopped. It provides that all the paper money of the Government shall be canceled. It provides that the bullion in the Treasury shall be held only for subsidiary coin. Yet the Secretary of the Treasury says that we have not the necessary currency; and he suggests the way in which we shall get it; that is, through the banks.

I read further from the language of the Secretary:

It is safe, I think, to estimate that in three years the total capital of national banks, if allowed to issue currency on their capital stock, would increase from the present amount of $663,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. With the right to issue circulating notes to par of their capital there would be the possibility of increasing the paper-money supply as population increased by the difference in amount between the present supply (greenbacks and bank notes both included) of, say, $706,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, or, in round numbers, $300,000,000.

The Secretary says that our increased population requires this increase of the circulation, and he suggests an increase of $300,000,000 in bank paper, and at the same time these banks are trying to contract the currency quite as much.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BELL. I ask that I may be permitted to conclude my remarks. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] suggested that I should have all the time that I wanted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to finish his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. BELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, this banking bill which I propose to put into the RECORD provides for destroying the greenbacks issued by the Government and issuing a greenback by the banks themselves. In fact, they offer a piece of paper that is a copy of the old greenback itself. Again, they propose to pay interest at 1 per cent on the deposits of this Government in the banks and to force the money of the Government into their vaults. But they very adroitly provide that the interest on this currency shall be for the benefit of the banks themselves—shall be used to relieve them from the redemption of their currency and other matters of like importance.

I want to say just a word about the condition that is now going on and is proposed to be intensified by this bill. The proposition is to turn the industries of this Government, soul and body, over to the banks, they controlling the entire currency, and they are to do it simply on the capital stock of the banks themselves.

This being Monday, we have this morning, I believe, no Treasury report, but I believe I have the figures as given a day or so ago, and they show in the banks of the United States $118,688,003.32.

What is that money worth on the market as shown by the rates that the States get for their money on deposit? Take, for instance, the State of Massachusetts as exhibiting about a fair average. According to the amount paid for the use of that money, the money the Government has now in the banks drawing no interest is worth over $8,000 a day. That money on deposit has a market value as well established as the market value of corn or cotton or wheat.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and I a couple of years ago got into a dispute. I said this money had as well established a value as any other commodity. He denied it. He said that the banks did not want it; that it was not profitable to them. I sat down that night and wrote to every State treasurer of the United States to ascertain what the funds of the various States were worth as a deposit, and I found by a return from the gentleman's own State of Connecticut that it had just drawn $32,000 from the banks of Connecticut as 2 per cent interest on money upon deposit. I found that my friends from the State of Kansas, received from New York, are paying them 2 per cent on their deposits; found the great State of Massachusetts, the great State of New York, and everywhere else, drawing from 2 to 3½ per cent, and some States were paying as high as 4.

Mr. MANN. What do you mean by States paying?

Mr. BELL. I mean that the States let out their money to the banks just the same as they sell any other commodity.

Mr. MANN. Well, the banks were paying.

Mr. BELL. The banks were paying for the deposits. It generally run from 2 to 3½ per cent if it remained any length of time, and from 1½ to 2½ per cent on money subject to daily checks.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman made investigation as to how far the payment of interest on deposits of public moneys goes to the public owning the funds?

Mr. BELL. All except in a few States. There were a few States that did not pay their State treasurers anything of consequence, and the treasurers were supposed to get their salaries out of it. Some of the Southern States, I think, did not pay over $800 or $900.

Mr. MANN. It is an interesting question. In my own State we pay pretty good salaries to treasurers, and they keep the 2 per cent on bank deposits in addition.

Mr. BELL. The treasurers do?

Mr. MANN. I regret to say that the treasurers do. I understand the gentleman to say that generally the municipality or State owning the fund collects the interest.

Mr. BELL. The majority of the States draw the interest, and it runs from 4 per cent down.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman found whether there is any place where money of the National Government is deposited and where the banks receiving public funds do so without the payment of interest to somebody?

Mr. BELL. Nowhere; and that is where I say we are menial to the banks themselves.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman has no information that is definite as to whether anybody receives any interest on account of the deposit of national funds?

Mr. BELL. Oh, I do not know about that. During the great cry, when there were some $20,000,000 in this bank over in New York and the bankers were making a row over it, they insisted, and the president of one of the great banking associations said, that money was worth 4 per cent to the banks; it was actually worth 4 per cent to the banks because it was permanent, and at that very minute New York on its canal funds, because they were somewhat permanent, received 3 per cent. I have all of the original letters yet. Pennsylvania draws interest, New York draws interest, Massachusetts draws interest, and every State, with a few rare exceptions, draws interest from deposits.

Mr. MANN. You mean the banks in those States—

Mr. BELL. I mean they make this money earn something.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman state what security these banks give before receiving the national deposit?

Mr. BELL. Just whatever they and the State powers agree upon.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not refer to the State deposits. I referred to the deposits of the National Government.

Mr. BELL. The National Treasury requires United States bonds, but there is no reason why they should not take any good security, as the States do. In this very bill that now has the approval of the banking association they are insisting on doing away with the bonds and issuing the money for this Government on their capital stock alone.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Is there not this difference between State deposits and national deposits? It is true, I think, that most of the States receive interest on deposits. I know in my State the State treasurer receives at the present time 2½ per cent on all deposits that he makes in national banks scattered over the State. The deposits are more or less permanent, so regarded; but with the United States deposits the United States Government requires the equivalent of United States bonds as additional security.

Mr. BELL. That simply means that a few shall have all the money.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. And the State has no security but the credit of the bank. The United States are secured by their own bonds.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think it is absolutely true that the States require security the same as the National Government does. I know mine does.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I do not know how it is with your State.

Mr. COCHRAN. They require security.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Not usually. In New England the State treasurers have a right to deposit in any State or national institution.

Mr. BELL. During President Cleveland's Administration, President McKinley from this floor severely criticised President Cleveland's Administration, because he said at that minute there were lying in the banks of the country $69,000,000 of the people's money, and that the people had a right to interest upon that money, and that President Cleveland's Administration allowed the banks to have it for nothing and to toll it back to the people at a high price. That was his view of it. But instead of there now being $69,000,000 there are $118,000,000 of this money in these banks that have the Government bonds. They get it for nothing and they lease it out to the people. In this banking bill they propose to let this money go into the banks, but it is only on bond securities, and therefore these big banks would get it.

Now, there is another thing about this banking bill that I want to speak of, and that is this: An effort has been made for many years to get two provisions in the banking laws. One is to have a foreign provision, a provision for foreign banking, so that a combination may take a charter from this Government to go abroad with, an official prestige as it were, and exploit those countries, and probably have a war ship hanging around now and then at your expense and mine to protect their capital and their investments there. That is in this bill. It has been defeated by this House I do not know how many times. Since I have been here I know of one time. That is one provision.

Another provision for which they have been yearning for years has been the branch-bank system. The great central banks in New York and elsewhere have been clamoring for years that they may be allowed to have a great central bank in New York with branches all over the United States. When that system is established, then good-bye to the small banks everywhere. They become mere agents of these big banks, handling their money, hiring their currency from them, or go out of existence. It means death to the little banks. That is the object.

The little bank has got to serve the big one or go out of existence, and the fact is, it will go out of existence. That is provided for in this bill. They are to have the right both to take the prestige of this Government and go to Germany or England or anywhere in foreign countries, with a quasi official title, to do banking, and I suppose our warships will hover around every time they get into a little trouble to protect United States investments. We are getting now too many men who are trying to go abroad. The idea now is entertained that this country is not good enough to live in, and day after day you find men are moving their families abroad, buying houses there, while ostensibly living here, or they themselves are going abroad.

It is pretty hard now to pass many days without seeing somebody who is just going abroad to remain. I notice this morning a very important gentleman has just sold out to go to the mother country—going to become a British citizen and live there because he likes it better than this country. Many are going, and when they do not become citizens of a foreign country, they will in fact move abroad and be only nominal American citizens. I think we should not encourage that in any particular. I here exhibit the increased circulation of gold and silver which accounts in a large measure for our phenomenal prosperity.

Abundance of currency makes good times and a scarcity of money makes hard times, and every contention that we have made heretofore or are now making for the quantitative the one of money is now admitted, not only by the Secretary of the Treasury, but by all the conditions. Our friends always misunderstood us, and I suppose they did it because they did not get at our real meaning. None of us ever insisted that silver was sacred or that gold was sacred. What we contended was that we did not have enough national money owned and controlled by the Government of the United States itself, and therefore when we coined all the gold and all the silver that could be gotten at our mints that we would still be short. That was our contention.

At the time there was a great scarcity of money. Following that came the greatest gold production that the earth has ever known. As that gold increased in volume business increased, and the year just passed we put more gold into the Treasury than ever went in before since this Government has been in existence. We have to-day $2.72 per capita more money in circulation than we had even two years ago. We have the largest circulation now that we have ever had since we have been a people. Therefore we have had the best times that we have ever had during the history of the Government.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Do you think that the effect on the prosperity of this country is due solely to the increase of money in this country or to the general increase of money in the world?

Mr. BELL. It has had a greater influence on the general prosperity in this country, and this was supplemented by the fact that we have had such phenomenal crops and such a phenomenal production of things that foreigners wanted during this special time.

Mr. HILL. Then you think that the prosperity is due to the phenomenal crops rather than to the increase in the circulating medium?

Mr. BELL. The phenomenal crops brought a great deal of this money to our shores.

Mr. HILL. If the increase in money during the last five years in this country has brought such a phenomenal prosperity to the United States, why has not the increase in Germany brought about a like prosperity to Germany?

Mr. BELL. The conditions are entirely different in Germany from a money and from an industrial standpoint.

Mr. HILL. That is what I think.

Mr. BELL. Germany has not had any such increase of money.

Mr. HILL. Oh, yes.

Mr. BELL. No; she has not. Germany has not had mines pouring out money in every conceivable portion of the country. Germany has not had the great productions that we have had in the diversified crops or the exports in other lines; not by any means.

Mr. HILL. After all, is it not the phenomenal crops that we have had that has given us the increase of prosperity, rather than the increase in the circulating medium?

Mr. BELL. The phenomenal crops that we have had have brought us great sums of money, and it has been the money condition and our industrial advantages combined. No one thing ever accounts for a prosperity like ours. I say the war in South Africa has done a great deal for our farmers in this country and for our producers, and all these war conditions—our own war in the Philippines has done a great deal. But there is no doubt that our great money supply has done much.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman please explain to me, when the per capita circulation in the United States is $28, and in Austria $7, and in Belgium $21, and the British Empire and in Australasia, $25, and varying from $2, and $3, and $4 in the different countries, where they are immediately adjoining each other in Europe, where the means of getting from one country to the other is so easy, how is it that this prosperity is not going from one to the other under your theory of circulation?

Mr. BELL. Per capita circulation has never been regarded by any economist as any test whatever. The original test, I think was by Calhoun, when the great discussion took place here, and all hands agreed that the per capita circulation did not signify anything except as a test of the quantity of the money of the country, and that you must have your money based upon worth of property to be exchanged. The equilibrium between money and property to be exchanged. A poor, nonprogressive people can absorb but little money.

Mr. HILL. I hope the gentleman will follow that line of argument right up in the next two or three weeks, when we bring in the bill for a set currency, which provides distinctly that there should be a volume of currency in the country to meet the demands of the business required to be done.

Mr. BELL. I would agree with your theory of exchange if you did not put the money in the hands of the banker, but let the Government issue it and control it, so that the bankers could not have the people buy of them and make the bankers prosperous, and leave the people to their misery, at the pleasure of the national-bank associations.

Mr. HILL. I will make a square proposition to the gentleman now: If he will show me any possible way by which the Government can issue any money having any relation to the business of the country I will vote for his proposition.

Mr. BELL. I have just given you Calhoun's views in the matter. There was a means suggested in his day, that the Government could very easily make the equilibrium of, say, $1 in money to each $30 in property to be exchanged.

Mr. HILL. How are they going to get it in circulation?

Mr. BELL. There is no trouble about getting money into circulation. This Government pays out millions daily, sells bonds from time to time, and buys money. Money will get in circulation—do not be uneasy—while we run this expensive machine.

Mr. HILL. Except in the payment of debt, how can the Government get money in circulation?

Mr. BELL. There need be no trouble about that. The Government has debts enough to put money in circulation for many years to come, and will always be making them.

Mr. HILL. But the Government of the United States, nor no other government in the world, has any power to put a dollar of money into circulation except by the payment of debts already incurred.

Mr. BELL. I notice that there was no difficulty about getting the greenbacks into circulation and none whatever in getting the Treasury notes into circulation. The banks of this country are trying to destroy every dollar that the Government has now in circulation and are trying to replace it with their own currency, and they may eventually force this Government to pay its debts.

Mr. HILL. With the gentleman's permission, I will ask him to tell me of some way that the United States Government can put one dollar into circulation except paying it on a debt which is already incurred.

Mr. BELL. Why, there is no question but what there are millions of debts annually incurred, and are enough now outstanding to absorb a billion dollars' worth of currency.

Mr. HILL. I am talking about debts already incurred.

Mr. BELL. The Government is making debts all the time. There is no trouble about getting money into circulation with an enterprising Government, but you want to take the money out of circulation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut: Does the Government put money into circulation when it issues, for instance, a large amount of interest-bearing bonds, when they can be exchanged for currency and the currency can be exchanged for bonds? Was it not able to put money into circulation that way?

Mr. HILL. It may if they were to go on issuing bonds.

Mr. COCHRAN. They have done it once; can not they do it now.

Mr. BELL. The coinage of this country is the greatest that this country has ever seen; we have more money than we have ever had before; and I find now, if the newspapers are to be believed, that the same power which is trying to destroy every dollar of Government paper and silver money is going to make its assault on gold. That question was raised twenty years ago. That was the contention in Europe twenty years ago—that they should destroy both gold and silver and have only bank paper.

I say that, in my judgment, the most dangerous thing that ever has come into this House is this banking bill that is before this Chamber at this time. You have here a Secretary of the Treasury, one of the greatest bankers of the land, insisting that the Government stop guaranteeing even the payment of the bank currency. You find him insisting that the banks may issue to the extent of their capital stock, put it upon the market, and it shall be made full legal tender as between citizens.

Mr. HILL. There is no such proposition.

Mr. BELL. It is in the bill itself.

Mr. HILL. There is no such proposition in the bill.

Mr. BELL. I am afraid the gentleman has not read the bill.

Mr. HILL. The gentlemen from Colorado can not have read the bill understandingly and maintain such a proposition.

Mr. BELL. Let us see whether I am right or not. It is idle for our friend or anybody else to insist that this is a dernier ressort.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman show me the proposition where the banking currency is made in this country legal tender between citizens?

Mr. BELL. I make the direct statement that it is provided that these notes they issue for the purpose of redeeming these outstanding obligations shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except the interest on the public debt and import duties.

Mr. HILL. That is not a note issued by the bank at all. That is a United States greenback, and no change is made in the provision of the law. The gentleman himself has not read the bill.

Mr. BELL. Yes, I have read it; and I say there is not a provision in it that is for the people. It is essentially a bankers' bill from beginning to end, and the provisions all show that. Now, here is the provision:

The manner and form of the assumption of the current redemption of the United States notes, as aforesaid, shall be as follows: Each note shall bear the indorsement:

"For value received, the ——— national bank of [city], [State], will currently redeem this note in gold coin until the same has been paid and canceled in accordance with the provisions of law."

Mr. HILL. Is that a bank note?

Mr. BELL. It is.

Mr. HILL. Not at all; it is a United States greenback. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think he has read the bill cursorily. The note to which he refers is the United States note, precisely the same as it is now, in no form or manner changed.

Mr. BELL. You assume these obligations, and you are going to force the people to take them with your indorsement upon them and they become your notes.

Mr. HILL. It is the same greenback that it is now.

Mr. BELL. You agree to assume 130,000,000 of this as your paper, and instead of issuing new obligations you indorse the greenback and send it out, and from that time it becomes your obligation, and it is just the same as though you issued new obligations.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman pardon me? The United States Treasury carries its reserve fund precisely the same as it does now, and the final payment is by the United States the same as it is now. In no way, shape, or manner is it changed in character, quality, or obligation. The only feature of it is that the burden is thrown upon the banks to redeem the obligations instead of compelling the United States Government to do it, but the final obligation is canceled by the Government and the legal obligation rests precisely where it does now without change. As I said before, either the gentleman has not read the bill or else he has read it so hastily that he does not comprehend its purpose.

Mr. BELL. The bill provides that you shall get these obligations on condition that you assume them, what will amount to one hundred and thirty millions of these outstanding obligations. Now, you assume and take from the Government one hundred and thirty millions, and instead of your issuing new obligations you simply provide that you shall assume these old greenbacks and put your indorsement on them, and from that time on you provide that they shall be yours. Why did you put the indorsement on?

Mr. HILL. The taxes go into the Treasury of the United States and then they come out again in payment of these obligations.

That does not change the proposition at all. You are talking about an entirely different subject. What I say is that these greenbacks are now obligations of the Government.

Mr. HILL. They continue so.

Mr. BELL. These greenbacks are now to be redeemed by the Government.

Mr. HILL. Certainly; you are right.

Mr. BELL. They are now legal tender for all debts, public and private, except customs dues and interest on the public debt.

Mr. HILL. And they continue just that way.

Mr. BELL. Yes; this bill provides that you shall assume this obligation, and from that time it shall be your obligation.

Mr. HILL. Not at all.

Mr. BELL. The writer of this bill did not understand that they would continue to be a legal tender as before, for in the next section it provides that you assume them by your indorsement and they become your obligation as a legal tender. I do not know why you did not leave out that section. Now, let us see how this is:

The manner and form of the assumption of the redemption of the United States note, as aforesaid, shall be as follows: The assumption for value received, the national banks, city or State, will currently redeem until the same has been paid and canceled in accordance with the provisions of law. Any note so indorsed shall be a legal tender "except for import duties and interest on the public debt."

Mr. HILL. The bill does not change the obligation at all.

Mr. BELL. Then why did you put that in?

Mr. HILL. Because there was no change made in the character of the obligation whatever.

Mr. BELL. Why did you make it again a legal tender?

Mr. HILL. We do not. We leave it just as it is.

Mr. BELL. You say it shall be a legal tender.

Mr. HILL. It is now.

Mr. BELL. Why did you put that section in? It stands for nothing if your position is right. My position is that you say to the Government, "You do these things for us, and we will take this burden off of you. Instead of issuing your own paper, we will put this obligation in a certain form." Then you provide that that shall be a legal tender.

A MEMBER. Do you suggest leaving out that clause?

Mr. BELL. No. But I say they made it a legal tender. And I want to say here and now that if the banks of this country are to issue and control the currency, it ought to be absolute legal tender. There ought not to be any of this partial legal-tender money. If the banks are to issue money for this Government, it ought to be full legal tender; it ought to pay all debts, both public and private. I do not know why the bondholders should not take this obligation the same as anybody else. There may be some reason why the import duties might be required to be paid in something else; but I do not see why a man who holds a Government bond should be a favored creditor of this nation except as regards bonds already outstanding.

We have given hundreds of millions already to these bondholders. They are pets of this Government. Since I have been a member of this House I have seen a message come here from the President of the United States saying to you and to me that if we would put into one sale of these bonds a provision that they should be paid in gold he could save over $16,000,000 in the issuing of such bonds. I saw that and you saw it. The Republicans on this floor and the Democrats, too, stood up and said, "We can not afford to make our bonds all payable in gold, and if we make one class payable in gold absolutely the obligation will be extended to all the others."

Mr. Cleveland insisted that the insertion of such a clause would make a difference in the value of these bonds payable in gold as compared with those simply payable in coin—a difference of a little more than $16,000,000. We said we would pay the $16,000,000. Immediately the bondholder purchased them as silver bonds at a reduced price of $16,000,000, and now the Treasury Department is treating those bonds as gold obligations. This is a gift of $16,000,000, and if it was some one that was having a little transaction with the Government, why they would chase him by the month for a little wash bill. Those fellows walk off with over $16,000,000 of the Government money.

Now, I am not prejudiced against banks and bankers, but I want to say they have got this Government by the throat, and they are trying to get a new hold on it, and the great banks of this country are getting now Government money worth nearly $8,000 a day for nothing. No ordinary citizen can get it. If this bill is passed I want to say good-bye to American industrial independence. Anybody that wants good investments must get in a big bank; he must not get in a little one, because the little banks will be crushed and go out of existence as these mighty institutions spread.

I have detained you longer than I expected or should have done, and I want to say in regard to these three bills, when these gentlemen bring them up for hearing, I will not get a chance to discuss them, you will not get a chance to discuss them; they will be whipped through here without discussion and without amendment, and while I often hear it said that there is never a time when the House can not overrule the Speaker, I say that that may be technically so, but it is not really so.

Mr. HILL. You do not object, do you, to the Government putting upon the banks the burden of paying one hundred and thirty millions of greenbacks, do you, and so relieving the Government from so much indebtedness?

Mr. BELL. I do, at the price the banks demand.

Mr. HILL. I do not know what that price is.

Mr. BELL. The price is that you shall turn over the destiny of this great country to the banks of the country.

Mr. HILL. That is a feature of the bill that I have not seen yet.

Mr. BELL. Well, I think you will find the opinion of the people. I want to be a banker if this bill ever passes.

Mr. HILL. There is not any earthly reason, if you have the capital to put up, why you should not be a banker now.

Mr. BELL. But I would not get in a little bank, because your object is to destroy the little banks. It will be the gigantic institutions that will spread their tentacles into every village in this country and wipe out the little banks or make them mere servants of the great central institutions, and these other banks will not have the assets upon which to issue the capital. The great institutions will be the ones to issue the capital and hire it out to the little banks. God forbid that such a nefarious act may be fastened upon this people.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to address myself to the pending bill, but to submit some remarks in connection with the resolution which it is understood is soon to be reported by the Committee on Rules providing for the appointment of a committee, nominally to investigate and report upon the question of the abridgment of the right of suffrage under the constitution and laws of any State in the Union, but really to be confined in its operations to certain Southern States in which the intelligent, virtuous, and property-holding classes have sought by peaceable and lawful methods to minimize the danger resulting from conferring political power upon ignorance, vice, and worthlessness.

I take advantage of this opportunity in general debate to submit some remarks on this resolution, because it is understood that when it is reported to the House the time for debate will be limited perhaps to twenty minutes on a side, which would amount practically to no time at all.

The purpose of this resolution is ostensibly to reduce the representation of these proscribed States on the floor of this House and in the electoral college on the specious pretense of love for and obedience to the Constitution of the United States. And yet the political party which is pushing this scheme is the party which has so often in recent years, and during the present session of Congress, shown its utter disregard for the Constitution, and has ruthlessly trampled under foot some of the most sacred provisions of that instrument, which underlie the very foundations of our free institutions. Therefore I fear that it is not love and reverence for the Constitution which prompts this movement, but an unholy desire to win political advantage. [Applause on Democratic side.]

I am glad that many of the more conservative and thoughtful members of the Republican party have deprecated this effort to stir up the fast-dying embers of sectional strife and ill-will. I am glad that the spirit of the lamented McKinley still lives in the breasts of some of the men in the party of which he was so conspicuous a leader. From that great, loving, kindly, Christian heart of his there went out a note which was akin to the song of the heavenly choir announcing to the wondering shepherds in the hills of Judea the greatest event of all the ages, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." * * *. On earth peace, good will toward men." McKinley said, "Let the South alone," and not only held out an olive branch, but he had nothing but kind words for our people. I shall always be glad that in his long ride across the continent in the year of his death he passed through our country and gave to our people an opportunity to show their appreciation of his noble efforts to eradicate sectional bitterness, allay sectional strife, and bring about a complete reconciliation between all the people of this glorious country, reunited not in name alone but in spirit also.

Much as we differed from him on some great questions of governmental policy, we believed then and we know now that during his four years at the head of the National Administration McKinley did more to accomplish these beneficent purposes than any man who has lived since the close of the great war. [Applause.] Then it is not strange that his tragic death came to us as a personal bereavement. He was our friend and he had the manliness to tell us so, notwithstanding we had never voted for him, and he had the tact to do it in a manner not to offend, and to convince us of his sincerity. Nowhere in all this broad land of ours were found more sincere mourners than in the South when the news flashed over the wires and was telegraphed from heart to heart that his gentle spirit had taken its flight from earth forever. I wish that more of his love of fairness and grandeur of purpose might find lodgment in the breasts of the leaders of the Republican party of to-day.

I am glad we have reached a point in our history when we hear less of "rebels and Yankees" and more of America and Americans, and I hope soon to see the glad day when the Northern leaders of public sentiment are enabled to understand that Southern men of equally high character with themselves know more of the vexing problems which endanger the social and business interests of their section, and know better how to deal with them than their brethren of other parts of the country who have not had the same opportunities for reaching correct conclusions with reference to these peculiar matters. There is no "negro problem" in the South if we can only be let alone in the management of our domestic affairs. The negro is happier, more content, and more generally prosperous than he has ever been since, by the proclamation by President Lincoln, he was declared to be a free man. That the conferring upon him of the elective franchise in his then condition was a great mistake has been long since conceded by many of the greatest and most patriotic thinkers of the Republican party.

But let us look further into the ultimate purposes of the advocates of this proscriptive legislation. I have no fears that the party in power will at this session of Congress reduce the representation of any State. In Congressional districts and in States where the negroes hold the balance of power the Republican candidates in the elections next fall may hope to win victories for themselves by singing a siren song of love to their black allies, but where there are few negroes and their votes unimportant the Republican candidates will not want to be handicapped by the accomplished fact of having reduced, for purely partisan reasons, the representation of any State and with the ghost of a force bill looming up on the horizon of the near future. This is especially true in such States as Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

If it were not that there still is truth in the heathen adage, "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad," I would not believe that this contemplated legislation would ever be enacted, and it may yet be that cooler and more conservative counsels will prevail, and there will be nothing but the miserable farce of a pretended investigation without any results except injury to the material interests of a people who are striving grandly to rebuild their waste places, advance along the lines of industrial and commercial progress, and preserve their magnificent civilization. But if the advocates of this repression should triumph over conservatism and should conclude that the people will endure it, their next step will be something in the nature of a force bill, with United States marshals around the polling places at Federal elections, and then that which is said to have broken loose in Georgia will be to pay.

In discussing this proposition to reduce representation in certain Southern States I shall undertake to do so under four subdivisions:

- First. The impracticability of the scheme.
- Second. The want of constitutional power on the part of Congress to deal with the question.
- Third. The effect of such action upon the business interests of the whole country, and
- Fourth. The effect upon the States subjected to such punitive legislation.

Under the first head I wish to call attention to the fact that there is no sufficient data upon which to base the contemplated action. Before there can be any intelligent and honest effort to reduce representation because of the denial or abridgment of the right of suffrage in any State there must be not only an ascertainment of the number of males over 21 years of age who are disfranchised, but the causes of such disfranchisement must also be shown.

Denial of the right to vote, which might result in reduction of representation under the provisions of section 2 of Article XIV of the Federal Constitution, can not be applied where the denial is a part of the punishment inflicted for the commission of crime. Every State is the sole judge as to what should constitute crime within its own jurisdiction, with the single limitation that such State laws shall not conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States. In Mississippi there are thousands who are denied the right to vote on account of the commission of crime, independent of other disqualifying causes, and yet there is no information available to Congress or reasonably to an investigating committee as to the number thus disfranchised.

A committee could ascertain the number now in the State penitentiary, and by examining the records of all the courts in every county could find the number in the jails and undergoing punishment in the hands of contractors for convict labor. This would be a long and expensive undertaking, and yet it would not furnish half the necessary information. There are thousands of others who have suffered their penalties, been discharged from custody, and are scattered all over the country, and who are still and forever disqualified from voting.

Again, it will be practically impossible to ascertain how many who have not registered as voters are disqualified for any reason and how many are not. Some whites and many negroes who could qualify fail to do so because of want of interest in political affairs.

Not half the white men in Mississippi whose names appear on the registration books vote in general elections, because, under our system of nomination by primary election, when a Democratic candidate is indorsed by his party the contest is ended, and only a fractional part of the Democratic and practically none of the Republican vote is polled at the general election. The advocates of this punitive legislation realize the insurmountable difficulties in the way of obtaining information necessary for intelligent action and propose to take as a basis of their calculations the vote actually polled in Congressional elections. One of the zealous supporters of this scheme, in a communication to the Washington Post a few days ago, takes the Congressional Directory as his guide, and compares the vote of Mississippi, by districts, with the vote of New York. Either ignorantly or corruptly he ignores the fact that in Mississippi there was no contest, and not one-third of the registered vote was polled, while in New York there was a hot fight, and practically all the votes on both sides were brought out.

No man on this floor who has any regard for truth and fairness will say that because all the qualified electors do not exercise their right to vote the State shall be punished by reducing its representation to that extent. There is no power under any constitution or statute that can compel a man to vote. The privilege is conferred under certain conditions, but its exercise is a purely voluntary act and can not be made compulsory. To reduce a State's representation because some of her citizens who are eligible as electors do not see proper to register and vote would be a monstrous and inexcusable crime against the sovereignty of the State and a flagrant and willful violation of the very clause of the Constitution which the friends of this measure profess to be so anxious to uphold. As I said in a speech delivered in the Fifty-sixth Congress on this subject, there must be another census, with specially prepared questions, before any such information can be obtained that would justify Congress to undertake the enforcement of this resolution.

Mr. PALMER. Suppose the facts can be ascertained, are you willing then to have your representation reduced?

Mr. SPIGHT. We are not willing, I will say in answer to that question, to surrender the rights the surrender of which has not been demanded from other States. I will say to the gentleman before I get through that as a last resort we would not only concede the right to reduce our representation, or the power to reduce our representation, but we would rather give it all up, and without any representation at all in this House, than to return again to the state of affairs existing in the reconstruction period, from 1869 to 1876.

Under my second subdivision I deny that Congress has the Constitutional power to deal with this question as now presented, but it is one for the Supreme Court first to determine. If any State, by its constitutional or statutory enactments, has violated any section or clause of the Federal Constitution this is not the forum in which that violation shall be declared; but it is a question which must be heard, tried, and determined in the judicial tribunal constituted for that purpose; and whenever that great court shall declare that the organic or statute law of a State is in conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States, then such State must modify its own enactments to conform to the decision of the court or suffer the penalties imposed.

The first section of the fourteenth amendment declares that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside;" but mere citizenship does not confer the right to vote. One must be a citizen before the privilege of the elective franchise can be bestowed, but this is not enough. Every woman and child born or naturalized in the United States is a citizen, but not a voter. The United States can make citizens but it can not make qualified voters. This latter power belongs only to the States, without any Federal limitations except that prescribed in the fifteenth amendment that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Subject to this restriction alone, the States have complete jurisdiction of the whole question of suffrage.

In the case of the United States v. Cruikshanks (92 U. S., 542), the Supreme Court says:

The Constitution has not conferred the right of suffrage upon anyone, and the United States have no voters of their own creation in the States. The fifteenth amendment has invested the citizens of the United States with a new constitutional right, which is exemption from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The right of suffrage is not a necessary attribute of national citizenship. The right to vote in the States comes from the States, but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States; but the last has been.

In Barbier v. Connolly (113 U. S., 237), in speaking of the fourteenth amendment, it is said:

Class legislation, discrimination against some and favoring others, is prohibited; but legislation which, in carrying out a public purpose, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment.

In McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S., 1) it is declared that—Neither the Constitution nor the fourteenth amendment made all citizens voters.

In Williams v. Mississippi (170 U. S., 213), which was an appeal from a decision of the supreme court of Mississippi holding that the constitution of 1890 was not in conflict with any clause of the Federal Constitution, one of the assignments of error was that the State constitution denied or abridged the right to vote, and that the representation in Congress had not been reduced in consequence thereof, thus presenting the very question sought to be raised by this resolution, and the Supreme Court of the United States, in a unanimous opinion, said: "The constitution and statutes of Mississippi do not on their face discriminate between the races," and the decision of the Mississippi court was affirmed. Thus it is shown that the constitution of Mississippi has been tested and sustained in the supreme courts of both the State and the United States. I will read the two sections of the present constitution of Mississippi upon which assaults have been made and which were considered by the court in the Williams case, from which I have just quoted:

SEC. 241. Every male inhabitant of this State except idiots, etc., * * * 21 years old and upwards, who has resided in this State two years, and one year in the election district * * * and who is duly registered * * * and who has not been convicted of bribery, burglary, theft, arson, obtaining money by false pretenses, perjury, forgery, embezzlement, or bigamy, and who has paid, on or before the 1st day of February in the year in which he shall offer to vote, all taxes which may have been required of him * * * is declared to be a qualified elector.

Section 244 contains the "understanding clause" about which so much has been heard, and reads as follows:

On and after the 1st day of January, 1892, every elector shall, in addition to the foregoing qualifications, be able to read any section of the constitution of this State, or he shall be able to understand the same when read to him, or give a reasonable interpretation thereof.

These sections do not deny the right of suffrage to anyone, but merely prescribe qualifications, which when summed up stand for good citizenship and some degree of intelligence. They shut out the ignorant, the vicious, the criminals, and those who, from worthlessness or disinclination, contribute nothing toward the support of the Government which protects them in their persons and property and furnishes the money to educate their children. For this the State is threatened with punishment by reducing our representation in Congress.

Mr. PALMER. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SPIGHT. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. If you have in fact excluded any portion of your population from exercising the right of suffrage, do you think they ought to be represented?

Mr. SPIGHT. The policy of the Government has been to base representation on population, and all ought to be represented. The Government is for the protection of all the people and for their benefit and not merely for those who vote, and I believe it is right that the representation should be based upon population rather than upon the number of those who should see proper to exercise the elective franchise.

Mr. PALMER. Then you ought to repeal the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SPIGHT. Well, sir, the party to which I belong is not responsible for the grafting of that amendment upon the Constitution; and whenever your party see proper to propose to repeal it, then we would be willing to vote with you on that.

Mr. PALMER. Is not the fourteenth amendment just as much a part of the Constitution as any other section? And ought it not to be enforced as much as any other section, as long as it is a part of the Constitution?

Mr. SPIGHT. Yes. And we are not violating it either, and do not intend to; and if we do, whenever it is shown to us by competent authority that we have violated it we are willing to bow to the decision of the court.

Mr. PALMER. As I understand it, that is exactly the purpose of this committee—to find out whether you have violated it or whether you are violating it—and you gentlemen object to a fair investigation.

Mr. SPIGHT. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that the Mississippi constitution is not in conflict with any clause of the Federal Constitution, and whenever they say that we are violating the Constitution of the United States we will bow to that decision, but we do not in advance propose to concede that we are doing that thing.

A number of Northern States have provisions very much like these and have had for years, but no effort has been made to reduce their representation.

While the Supreme Court of the United States has never directly decided the question, it is held by many of the ablest lawyers and most profound thinkers of this country that the adoption of the fifteenth amendment had the effect of abrogating the punitive clause of the second section of the fourteenth amendment, and among this number was James G. Blaine, one of the most brilliant men of his generation, a great leader of the Republican party, and with an intense anti-Southern feeling.

In his book, Twenty Years in Congress, speaking of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments and the effect of the one upon the other, he uses this language:

When the nation, by subsequent change in its Constitution, declared that the State shall not exclude the negro from the right of suffrage, it neutralized and surrendered the contingent right as heretofore held to exclude him from the basis of apportionment. Congress is thus plainly deprived by the fifteenth amendment of certain powers over representation in the South which it previously possessed under the fourteenth amendment. Before the adoption of the fifteenth amendment if a State should exclude the negro from suffrage, the next step would be for Congress to exclude the negro from the basis of apportionment. After the adoption of the fifteenth amendment if a State should exclude the negro from suffrage, the next step would be for the Supreme Court to declare that the act was unconstitutional and therefore null and void.

But Mr. Blaine expressed the opinion that the first, third, and fourth sections of the fourteenth amendment were not affected by the adoption of the fifteenth amendment. So that, in the estimation of this eminent authority, this question is not one for a partisan Congress to determine, but is one for the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In further answer to the gentleman's question I wish to suggest that as eminent an authority as Judge Cooley has said, in his Principles of Constitutional Law, that an educational qualification is not an abridgment of the suffrage; that a tax qualification is not an abridgment of the suffrage; that a thing in order to be an abridgment of the suffrage must cut it entirely off, but that a qualification such that a man may equip himself for suffrage is not an abridgment, and he refers to several Supreme Court decisions in support of that proposition.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to refer to that authority also, but I shall adopt the language of my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and will leave that branch of the subject.

Whatever may be said as to the validity of what is known as "the grandfather clause" in some of the recently adopted State constitutions, the discussion of which I shall leave to gentlemen whose States are affected thereby, the constitution of Mississippi has stood the test, and there is no longer any question as to its validity. The third proposition which I propose to discuss briefly is the effect of the agitation of this question upon the business interests of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT] has expired.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have leave to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi be allowed to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPIGHT. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his kindness.

With the freedom from political disturbances which has prevailed for several years, the South is advancing more rapidly along industrial lines than any other part of this country. Labor is becoming more settled. The negro, instead of looking to politics as his chief end, is devoting himself to raising corn and cotton and providing the necessities of life for his family, and striving for a home of his own. The enormous value of our agricultural products, our coal and iron fields, our gushing oil wells, our forests of valuable timber, and our rapidly growing manufacturing interests of various kinds, together with our salubrious and semitropical climate, and with fuel and water for the motive power of machinery in sight of the raw products for feeding the factories, have attracted Northern and Eastern capitalists, and they have invested millions of dollars in Southern enterprises; and under wise and beneficent policies there is no limit to the possibilities of the South in progress and development. It would be superfluous for me to say that the greater the prosperity of the South the more abundant the wealth of the whole country.

It is also a self-evident fact that when disturbing causes contribute to retarding the growth and development of the South the great centers of trade are injuriously affected. It is of almost, if not quite, as much moment to the business interests of the North and East as to the South to avoid every disturbing element which would tend toward checking our development and the unsettling of property values. Everything which has a tendency to stir up strife, alienate labor, and create distrust in the minds of capitalists is a menace to the business interests of the country which every patriotic citizen desires to prevent. Gentlemen who favor this repressive legislation for partisan purposes and political advantage will find, when it may be too late, that the sober business sense in every section of the country will condemn it as unwise, unpatriotic, and hurtful.

The last proposition to which I shall address myself is the effect which the contemplated action would have upon the States to which it is intended to apply. Nobody on either side of this question believes that it is the purpose to interfere with any but Southern States, and in considering this last branch of the subject I shall speak of it as it will affect Mississippi, and I believe that the same conditions will be found to exist in a large measure in all the other proscribed States.

While the language of our constitution is so carefully guarded as to prevent its conflict with the fifteenth amendment, I will not deny that the leading purpose was to eliminate the negro from the political equation, and no honest man who has any conception of the horrors of the reconstruction period can blame us. None but those who suffered as we did can understand what we had to endure in the fateful years from 1869 to 1876. Our homes were desolated, our fields were only waste places, our property was gone, and our magnificent civilization was threatened. The hungry carpetbagger, without conscience or decency, the synonym of rapine and plunder, had invaded our land and desecrated the high stations once occupied by our fathers. Attila, the Hun, was called the "scourge of God;" the carpetbagger was, in fact, the scourge of the devil.

A black horde, whose dense ignorance was only equalled by their credulity, were the willing tools of their unscrupulous leaders and rejoiced in the power to oppress and humiliate the white people of the State. Imagine, if you can, what the intelligent and virtuous people of any Northern State would feel if they should be compelled to look into the office of their chief executive and see a man posing as governor, an alien and a stranger, without a dollar's worth of property in the State, and without a spark of sympathy for the people over whom he was called to rule. Then turn to the legislative halls and find them filled with the most ignorant and depraved class in the Commonwealth, reveling in a saturnalia of plunder, and assuming to make laws of which they have no conception save that they are intended to put "black heels on white necks," and then tell me, if you dare, that the people would stand it.

All this and more we have seen, and the only wonder is that we bore it so long. At last when "forbearance had ceased to be a virtue" delivery from these hateful and ruinous conditions could only be accomplished in one of two ways. Either there must be open violence and bloodshed, or the more peaceful method of the tissue ballot must be resorted to. Driven to desperation as were our people, I do not deny that, for a time, election frauds were practiced, and the only apology, if any I should make, which I have to offer is, that it was that or worse, and I am not ashamed to say that under the same conditions we would do it again. But for many years elections in Mississippi have been as free from fraud as in any State in this Union.

Notwithstanding two disastrous crop seasons in succession our people are forging ahead, and though our farmers are much depressed by their failures in the last two years, with the courage which has always characterized Mississippians they enter upon this new year with renewed hope and confidence. As I have said before, the negro is more contented than he has ever been since his emancipation, and his pretended white friends can do him no greater harm than to hold out to him again the tempting bauble of political activity. It will demoralize him as laborer, wage-earner, and wealth producer and will strike a deadly blow at all prosperity. No better advice can be given than to say "let the negro alone." The white people are paying for the education of his children, and he knows it. He is on terms of friendship with the dominant classes and his rights are as well protected as in any State in the Union, and all he has to do is to be a law-abiding and industrious citizen and he will command the respect and good will of the white people, who are his best friends. Nothing but harm can come from filling his mind again with political ideas. He is emotional in the highest degree and is easily carried away by blind, unreasoning enthusiasm, and it would be an easy task for a shrewd, designing, and unscrupulous white man to make him believe that he is an important political factor and so poison his mind as to unfit him for the ordinary and profitable duties of life.

If it is imagined by the advocates of this resolution that the threat which it conveys, or the actual reduction of our representation, will compel our people to change our suffrage laws, they are laboring under a gross delusion. It will never be done. We would rather have no representation in Congress than to have ignorance, vice, and corruption restored to political power in our State government.

We still have in the South the truest and noblest type of Anglo-Saxon civilization to be found in the world, and we intend to preserve it at all hazards. We received it in a halo of glory from our fathers, and we intend to transmit it untarnished to our children. We love honor and true manhood. We admire courage and patriotic devotion to duty wherever found. We despise hypocrisy and condemn a coward. We love our State and all her interests and are proud of her achievements in field and forum.

The sanctity of our homes and the purity of our beauteous womanhood are far dearer to us than life itself, and these can be cherished, fostered, and protected only under a white man's government; and this we will maintain with "our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." You may shear us of our political power, if you will, but we will still have left the proud consciousness of knowing that we are right; that our homes and our loved ones are protected, and our local governments remain in our own hands; and trusting to Him who rules nations and peoples, and waiting for the returning sense of justice, and believing that the American people will yet do right, we will "run with patience the race that is set before us," and in the light of our Christian civilization solve every problem as it arises. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Just one word. Is the gentleman from Missouri in his seat?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. We have had one hour and you have had the balance of the day. How much additional time does my friend require?

Mr. BENTON. Well, so far as I know fifty minutes covers all the time I have promised; and if there is no other gentleman on that side to speak, why we can get through by 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will ask unanimous consent that we close general debate when we adjourn to-day.

Mr. BENTON. I see no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill close with to-day's session. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I suggest if the gentleman can take care of me in the morning, if I have no time between now and 5 o'clock, I shall have no objection.

Mr. BENTON. You can protect yourself under the five-minute rule by obtaining an extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I make the usual apology in submitting these remarks. I apologize because I shall not discuss the bill under consideration; but it would seem that an apology is hardly necessary, inasmuch as it appears to be the custom of this House to discuss the merits of one measure while some other measure is being considered. It is not deemed improper to discuss, for instance, the tariff when the Indian appropriation bill is under consideration. Bills about which there is an honest difference of opinion are rushed through almost without debate, while ample time for discussion is permitted when bills about which there is no contest are considered. Fortunately there is, I am told, no rule of the House requiring gentlemen to confine their remarks to the subject under consideration. This strikes the new member as being a little peculiar, but we are told that this is one of the great liberties permitted by the Reed rules.

Now, in the exercise of my right as an American Representative, I saw fit the other day to introduce certain resolutions requiring the Speaker to appoint a select committee of 13, whose duty it shall be to investigate the corrupt use of money in elections by all the great political parties. These resolutions have been misrepresented to such an extent by the Republican press of the country that I feel constrained to submit some remarks.

The reply of the Republican press is threefold. They say, first, that I am proposing to investigate the use of money by the Republican party only, and that the resolutions are therefore unfair. Those who charge this certainly did not read the resolutions.

The word "Republican" is not used. They would inaugurate an investigation of the use of money by the national committees of all the great political parties offering candidates for President in the years 1896 and 1900. Why the Republican press should distort the resolutions I can not imagine, unless it is prompted to do so by a consciousness of the guilt of its own party. Secondly, this partisan press has attempted a little ridicule which is indeed crushing. It suggests that I am a new member. My reply is that I came here just as soon as I could get here. [Laughter.] Thirdly, it suggests that I am a member of unimportant committees. I deny this; but if it be true, a Republican Speaker is responsible, and not myself. [Laughter.] All this, Mr. President, will not prevent honest men, thinking men, from giving the resolutions some consideration.

How is it that this House is about to enter into an investigation of the affairs of the States? What has provoked the resolutions of the gentleman from Indiana? I can only speak for my own State. It is not necessary to go further back than the year 1894. During that year two parties, professedly opposite in principles, united to carry our State. One favored the free coinage of silver, while the other was committed to the gold standard. One favored the subtreasury project, while the other favored the national banks.

One favored the Government ownership of railroads, while the other favored the railroad ownership of government. And there were other radical differences between these two parties, but all that made no difference. Offices they wanted and offices they intended to have. So they divided out all the offices, except the electors for President. Their leaders even went so far as to calculate the emoluments of the numerous offices parceled out in order that the division might be just and fair. This is not a jest, Mr. Chairman, but a melancholy truth. On election day, in compliance with their programme, 50,000 white men walked to the ballot box by the side of more than 100,000 negroes, and decent government was overthrown in the State.

It gives me pleasure to admit that some men in both these parties repudiated this unnatural alliance, and that most of those who did repudiate it helped us to redeem the State in 1898. What was the result? What offspring was born to this union? As I love my State, I hesitate to make this admission. As I am proud of her history, I am ashamed for the world to hear it. The result of this fusion enabled more than 900 incompetent negroes—some of them vicious, very many of them venal—to occupy positions of trust or profit in our good old State from 1894 to 1898.

There was incompetency almost everywhere. Public virtue was ridiculed. There were many rumors of scandal in high places. Bills were put upon the statute books which never passed either house of the general assembly. The negro, by nature kind, became insolent. Our wives and our daughters walked the streets of some of our largest towns in the broad day time in constant fear of negro insults. During these few moments I can give you but a faint idea of the humiliation of our good old State.

In 1898 the white men of North Carolina united and swept these people from power. In 1900 they boldly, openly adopted an amendment to their constitution which renders a repetition of this condition forever impossible. I have not the time to-day, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the constitutionality of that amendment. We believe it will be sustained by the courts. We do not believe that by law the Republican majority in the House has any right to reduce our representation here. But we have done what we have done.

If the law of the land requires a reduction in our representation in this House we will submit to it. I undertake to say there is not a Democratic member from our State who would not willingly give up his seat if it were necessary to save our State from the curse of negro rule. If you wish to punish us for protecting our homes, do your worst. We defy you. We shall appeal from the blind partisan here to our patriotic and sympathetic white brother in all the States of the Union. Think you this appeal will be in vain?

But, Mr. Chairman, while they are proposing to investigate, I thought it would be a good idea to propose an additional investigation. Let us ascertain, if we can, something about the corrupt use of money in our national elections. While you are investigating the legal suppression of the negro vote in the South, suppose you investigate the purchase of white votes in other sections. It is a matter of common knowledge that large funds are raised and distributed in every campaign by the Republican party. It is charged, and not denied, that this corruption fund (for it can have no other correct name) in 1896 amounted to millions. It has been charged that the Republican national chairman raised $600,000 in one city, and more than a million in another. Of course this can not be proven without the aid of the law.

I do not undertake to say the statement is true, but it is believed to be true by many an honest man in this country. One of the editorials in a Republican paper, which misrepresented my resolutions (as the editor has since admitted), uses these words: "It is the common belief that far too much money is spent in our political campaigns. It is a growing evil, and many men deplore it." When a Republican paper makes this admission, Mr. Chairman, you may rest assured that a very grave evil exists. Whether true or false, there is a belief entertained by many a good man that the Presidency of this great Republic goes to the party who can raise the greatest corruption fund. Let us illustrate.

Suppose, in 1904, the Republican party shall name its candidate, supply its national chairman with unlimited means, as was said to be the case in 1896, and suppose the Democratic party shall name its candidate, and its national chairman shall only be supplied with enough money to defray the legitimate expenses of the campaign, which candidate do you suppose will win? Now, reverse the proposition. Give the Democratic national chairman plenty of money and the Republican chairman little or none. How do you think doubtful States will go?

Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that there would be very much Republican money put up on their candidate? The parties are so equally divided that a few doubtful States generally decide the election. How utterly abominable the practice of pouring money like water into these doubtful States to corrupt their votes! How utterly horrible this quadrennial contest between campaign funds! If my party is guilty, let us turn on the lights. Let us investigate, and if these rumors be true which we constantly hear, let us do something to put an end to the practice forever.

We sometimes hear men suggest that the Republic is in danger. Most of this is idle talk. But, Mr. Chairman, there is one real danger; there is one ever-present menace to liberty. It overhangs our beloved country like a black cloud. It is the corruption of the American electorate by the use of money. Neither party can justify the practice by charging that the other party is guilty. It never has been right to "fight the devil with fire." Gentlemen can not evade the responsibility. No man should be willing for his party to do that which he would not do himself.

For one, Mr. Chairman, I prefer a repression of partisan strife. Rancor and partisan bitterness are to be deplored at all times. Let us look beyond our own State, our own section, and embrace within our loyalty and our love every inch of this Republic. Let the gentleman from Indiana be warned that no good can come of his investigation, but much harm. Let him be warned that it will open up strife in a land now prosperous and peaceful. It might be well for him to ask himself whether there is any demand for the passage of his resolutions. But if his party shall insist upon an investigation let it proceed to correct, if possible, the very greatest of all our national evils.

Mr. Chairman, it remains to be seen what will be done with the resolutions I have seen fit to introduce. They have been referred to the Committee on Rules. That committee is all-powerful, but the resolutions will not be reported. They will sleep, because, if adopted, they will expose such practices as will render a continuance of the power of the Republican party hereafter impossible. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, on page 58 of this bill I find a provision which I intend to take as a text for a few remarks, which I will make as broad and philosophical as I can, concerning its general significance and concerning the general significance of conditions of the sort sought to be met by it throughout the world. This provision is for the enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act.

Enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act: To prevent unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, and for expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, $200,000, of which sum $1,000 per annum shall be paid to the collector of customs at Port Townsend as additional compensation and $1,000 per annum shall be paid to the Commissioner-General of Immigration as additional compensation.

As an American citizen, as a Democrat, as a student of ethnology, I am emphatically in favor of that provision. I am emphatically in favor of every provision and every law which attempts at any hazard to secure to the Republic a homogeneity of population. I am in favor of every provision that would keep a white man's country his in its civilization, in its code of ethics, and in its government, and conversely of every law and policy that would restrain the white man in his own country and keep him from superimposing himself upon the black man, the yellow man, or the brown man in his country.

I will show you before I am through that in what I say I am expressing no narrow prejudice, no sectional view, but a conclusion at which white men have always arrived—men of our race—when they are confronted by a situation which demands any race conclusion at all.

Mr. Chairman, the feeling of the white race which leads it to try to guard itself from the infringement of other races, and which leads it to regard the amassing of any considerable number of any other race in its midst as a menace to its civilization and to its very life, is a feeling which has caused much argument concerning its source. Some people contend that it is an instinct; other people argue that it is a prejudice. I care not which it is; it is a fact, which has existed always under circumstances calling for its assertion, and which always will exist.

I do not myself think that it is an instinct, because I find little children not sharing it. I do not think it is a prejudice, because prejudice is a conclusion founded unreasonably and without cause. I would rather define it to be a common-sense, historical, induction and just conclusion, arrived at from being confronted with an actual condition. It has existed everywhere.

Early in the history of this country it existed in the anti-red man form in Massachusetts. All the early epistolary literature of New England is full of the idea, of white people, being the Israel of God, contending against red men, as Gentiles and Philistines, and Hittites and Amalekites. It exists in Arizona and New Mexico in the anti-Digger form. It exists on the Pacific slope in the anti-Chinese form. It exists in South Africa in the anti-Kaffir form. It exists down South, though not as strongly as elsewhere, in the anti-negro form.

It has gone down South only to the point of resenting any effort to bring the negroes to a social and political equality. It does not exist there industrially. It is everywhere else on the surface of the globe a resentment against collaborating with the white man even. There have been some few exceptions upon limited areas in the Tropics, but wherever the exceptions have existed they have been followed by hybridizations, by loss of self-respect among men and women—the latter chiefly—by race deterioration, and by loss of manhood.

Now, gentlemen, I said that I would promise to show you that this feeling is not a feeling of mere prejudice, but is the common-sense conclusion of wise men when confronted with a situation. I want to read you a few lines from Abraham Lincoln, whom my people at one time hated perhaps as they hated no other man—a man whom the student of history learns to respect more and more from day to day as a man of broad charity and a very considerable degree of philosophy; marvelous, indeed, considering his preparation and education. Here is what he said in the general debate with Mr. Douglass in 1858:

Now, gentlemen, I do not want to read at any greater length, but this is the true complexion of all I have ever said in regard to the institution of slavery and the black race. This is the whole of it, and anything that argues me into his idea of perfect social and political equality with the negro is but a specious and fantastic arrangement of words, by which a man can prove a horse-chestnut to be a chestnut horse. I will say here, while upon this subject, that I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the States where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so. I have no purpose to introduce political and social equality between the white and black races. There is a physical difference between the two which, in my judgment, will probably forever forbid their living together upon the footing of perfect equality, and, inasmuch as it becomes a necessity that there must be a difference, I, as well as Judge Douglas, am in favor of the race to which I belong having the superior position. * * *

Judge Douglas has said to you that he has not been able to get from me an answer to the question whether I am in favor of negro citizenship. So far as I know, the judge never asked me such a question before. He shall have no occasion to ever ask it again, for I tell him very frankly that I am not in favor of negro citizenship. This furnishes me an occasion for saying a few words upon the subject. I mentioned, in a certain speech of mine which has been printed, that the Supreme Court had decided that a negro could not possibly be made a citizen, and, without saying what was my ground of complaint in regard to that or whether I had any grounds of complaint, Judge Douglas has from that thing manufactured nearly everything that he ever says about my disposition to produce an equality between the negroes and white people.

If anyone will read my speech he will find I mentioned that as one of the points decided in the course of the Supreme Court opinions, but I did not state what objection I had to it. But Judge Douglas tells the people what my objection was, when I did not tell them myself. Now, my opinion is that the different States have the power to make a negro a citizen under the Constitution of the United States, if they choose. The Dred Scott decision decides that they have not that power. If the State of Illinois had that power I should be opposed to the exercise of it. That is all I have to say about it.

Before proceeding let me say I think I have no prejudice against the Southern people. They are just what we would be in their situation. If slavery did not exist among them they would not introduce it. If it did now exist among us, we should not instantly give it up. This I believe of the masses North and South. Doubtless there are individuals on both sides who would not hold slaves under any circumstances and others who would gladly introduce slavery anew if it were out of existence. We know that some Southern men do free their slaves, go North, and become tip-top Abolitionists; while some Northern men go South and become most cruel slave masters. When Southern people tell us they are no more responsible for the origin of slavery than we, I acknowledge the fact.

When it is said that the institution exists, and that it is very difficult to get rid of it, in any satisfactory way, I can understand and appreciate the saying. I surely will not blame them for not doing what I should not know how to do myself. If all earthly power were given me, I should not know what to do as to the existing institution. My first impulse would be to free all the slaves and send them to Liberia, to their own native land. But a moment's reflection would convince me that whatever of high hope (as I think there is) there may be in this in the long run, its sudden execution is impossible. If they were all landed there in a day they would all perish in the next ten days; and there are not surplus shipping and surplus money enough in the world to carry them there in many times ten days. What then? Free them all and keep them among us as underlings?

Is it quite certain that this betters their condition? I think I would not hold one in slavery at any rate. Yet the point is not clear enough to me to denounce people upon. What next? Free them and make them politically and socially our equals? My own feelings will not admit of this; and if mine would, we well know that those of the great mass of white people will not. Whether this feeling accords with justice and sound judgment is not the sole question, if, indeed, it is any part of it. A universal feeling, whether well or ill founded, can not be safely disregarded. We can not, then, make them equals. It does seem to me that systems of gradual emancipation might be adopted; but for their tardiness in this I will not undertake to judge our brethren of the South.

While I was at the hotel to-day an elderly gentleman called upon me to know whether I was really in favor of producing a perfect equality between the negroes and white people. While I had not proposed to myself on this occasion to say much on that subject, yet as the question was asked me, I thought I would occupy perhaps five minutes in saying something in regard to it. I will say, then, that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of bringing about in any way the social and political equality of the white and black races; that I am not, nor ever have been, in favor of making voters or jurors of negroes, nor of qualifying them to hold office, nor to intermarry with white people; and I will say in addition to this that there is a physical difference between the white and black races which I believe will forever forbid the two races living together on terms of social and political equality. And inasmuch as they can not so live, while they do remain together there must be the position of superior and inferior, and I as much as any other man am in favor of having the superior position assigned to the white race.

I want, furthermore, to call your attention to this important fact: That after four years of war had embittered men's feelings, after four years of war had got men on both sides at the blood-boiling point, where they sought more to destroy and punish than they sought conclusions of calm reason, Abraham Lincoln, up to a week before the time he was assassinated, had gone no further than the Mississippi constitution goes to-day. He said, in a letter to Judge Hunt, of Louisiana:

Can it not be possible that you can make some provision for even admitting to suffrage such of these people as are amongst their best educated men and most intelligent classes?

I quote from memory. But this is not all, Mr. Chairman. Some of you remember the late Senator Fessenden, of Maine, who, when discussing the Chinese-exclusion bill in the Senate, said this:

I by no means assent to the doctrine that the negroes are required by the Constitution of the United States to be placed on an equal footing in the States with white citizens.

GREAT REPUBLICAN LEADERS DECLARE THEIR CONVICTIONS.

Preston King, a Republican Senator from New York, a man of great ability, thought the provision in the Oregon constitution against permitting free negroes to settle in the State was harsh, but declared:

I certainly would not be in favor of encouraging the immigration of any considerable number of black men to settle and live among a white population. I think it is the interest of both races that they should live apart.

He favored, so Senator George, of Mississippi, said, the settlement of the free blacks in Central and South America, and he was, he said, perfectly willing that the people of the new free States should exercise their discretion, and exclude negroes if they saw proper.

Remember, Senator King was not discussing whether he would be willing to give negroes suffrage in New York, but whether they ought to be permitted to immigrate thither.

So do I, wherever it is possible, favor keeping them apart, but wherever it is no longer possible for them to live apart—if condemned by historical consequence to live together—I think they should live together upon a working plan whereby civilization itself shall be saved. I think it is brave and noble to meet with a bold and honest front the race problems with which we are confronted. I think it is absolutely foolish to go, like knights-errant, into places all around the world hunting up race problems for the pure fun of solving them.

While I would like to keep the Chinaman and other inferior races away from the white man's country for the purpose of securing as much homogeneity of race, and therefore of aspiration, social and political experience, and tradition as possible, I would also, if I had my way, keep the white man away from the black man's, and the yellow man's, and the brown man's country, and I would not have him superimpose himself upon them. So much for Fessenden and King. Now, I will ask you to listen to this from Judge Edmunds, of Vermont. He says:

This feeling against the Chinaman and this race feeling generally is based upon the belief that nations and races as they have been constituted by the God of nature—

Thank heaven for the word! God made these races, gentlemen. "He fixed their boundaries." Why, I frequently hear people talking on this line, say: "Why should either rule the other? Why should they not live together in perfect fraternity and perfect peace, governing together a common country?" Simply because "God made them." And until God changes them, with their instincts, with their prejudices, their evolution, their aspirations, with their separate characters—theirself, indeed—they are for all purposes of government like water and oil; they will not mix one with the other; one or the other must float; you may have your choice as to which one of the two shall float, but no other choice under God do you have. But to read on further from Senator Edmunds:

This feeling against the Chinaman and this race feeling generally is based upon the belief that nations and races, as they have been constituted by the God of nature and by political and geographical divisions and arrangements, get on better as separate families with their separate independence and their separate institutions than they do amalgamated together, unless their origin, their race, their tendency, their nature is such that being put together they can assimilate and become one perfect, homogeneous, and prosperous mass.

I do not need to call the attention of Senators to that fundamental principle of domestic government, that in order to success—that just success which produces happiness to its people—no republic can succeed that is not a homogeneous population.

All this, Mr. President, is fundamental in the long reaches of historic observation everywhere.

My learned friends from Massachusetts may begin with Aristotle and come down to Webster, and they will find everywhere over that long reach of human experience that the fundamental idea of a prosperous republic must be the homogeneity of its people.

Ah! "those long reaches of historical observation everywhere!" They are the only unfailing sources of wisdom.

Now, if the House will indulge me for a moment, I intend to read something else. I intend to read something which, I will say, was intended by me as a grand hailing sign of the white people of the South to their brethren upon this continent and especially upon the Pacific slope. My friends upon the Pacific slope, you have never asked us for bread when dealing with your race problem, which is absolutely insignificant in comparison with ours, without getting what you wanted.

Time and time again we have plead with you for bread and you have given us a stone, and not because you believe any more than

I believe that there is any inborn, inherent, and natural equality among all "featherless bipeds" on the surface of this globe, but for other reasons which I do not intend to go into now. God knows this question is not a question for harsh language nor for crimination nor for recrimination. Moreover, it is not a question of boasting because of what we have done to save ourselves. We have done the best we could do. We propose to do the best we hereafter can do.

Some of our methods have perhaps been crude and some of them perhaps wrong, but we have at any rate done one thing; we have come out after a long and unsuccessful war, and then after a longer and still more unsuccessful and humiliating reconstruction period, with the white ribbon, as the symbol of the white man's civilization, still fluttering upon the tips of our lances, and with God's blessing we will try to make it float forever there. Soon after I came to the Congress of the United States, in talking upon a Chinese-exclusion bill, I used the language which I said I would quote, some of which I will read. I said:

I have found that human nature, all over the world, from the mouth of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Danube, is just about the same thing, within the same broad racial limits. Within the great limits which God has fixed (and it happens accidentally that that is Senator Edmunds's language too), guarded by certain instincts, impulses, tendencies, traditions—within those lines—human nature is the same everywhere. I am willing to trust the motives, the manhood, the generosity, the capacity for self-government, and the capacity for governing, if need be, inferior races, inherent in the white people of the Pacific slope, just as I have appealed to them and as those who have stood here before me have appealed to them and others to trust the capacity for self-government of the people of the South.

I added the following:

I shall support this bill, believing as I do that the white race in the West, as at the South, standing upon the higher round of the ladder of civilization, is willing to put its hands down to the inferior race standing upon the lower level and bring that race up, not to the same level, because, God willing, as the inferior race comes up to our old position, we shall go up by our own development to a new one, bringing the inferior up behind us as we go. But if in response to our invitation to come up higher he shall say to us, "Come thou down lower to me," we answer him in the language of Tennyson, indignant and astonished—

"What! I to herd with narrow foreheads, Vacant of our glorious gains?"

I tell you it is not only the highest law, but it is the highest duty, of every life to secure self-preservation and self-perpetuation. I care not whether the life be the life of an individual, a family, a race, a nation, or of a civilization. God has given to everything worthy of life in this world the instinct and has made it a duty to resist attacks from whatsoever quarter, and although your problem out on the Pacific coast is not as serious a one as that with which we are struggling in the South, it may in time become so.

There will come a time, if the influx of Chinamen goes on upon the Pacific slope, when the demagogue will, in order to bolster up party purposes, demand that the Mongolian be equipped with the suffrage "in order that he may defend himself."

I do not remember a single effort of any great man that is so indelibly impressed upon my mind as that of Thomas Jefferson, made early in the history of this country, when he tried to prevail upon our forefathers in Virginia, not only to stop the importation of negroes, but to emancipate and deport them. He failed. He acknowledged that the failure of the effort was because the people were not prepared for it. He went further and said that they would be less and less prepared for it as the numbers of the race increased and antagonisms grew, "yet the day is not distant," he said, "when they must bear and adopt it or worse will follow." Then he added, "For there is nothing more certainly written in the Book of Fate than these two things—first, that these people are to be free, and, secondly, that no two unequal races can long live on the same soil equally free."

And I have frequently thought that there were few men who ever existed, not only in this country, but anywhere else, who equaled Thomas Jefferson in his magnificent foresight. On the occasion referred to I said further:

Had there been prescience enough—that sort of prescience with which intellect is endowed by unselfish love of country—to have followed this greatest of Americans in his leadership then, we would have been rid of a constant threat to our civilization and to our race.

We would not have been standing as we are now upon the very verge of a volcano, ready at almost any time to break forth. We may possess little of the sympathy of some of you gentlemen whom I am trying to help to-day; we may at times possess but little hope except the assurance given us by the fact that we have hitherto proven equal to every emergency, and shall, in the providence of God, prove equal to every emergency in the future; still we trust that we may always conjoin law and order with liberty; that we may, while preserving our own civilization, have the manhood to be just to those to whom we must be schoolmasters.

I am willing, then, Mr. Speaker, as long as the men of the Pacific slope do not ask anything inhuman, do not ask of me anything cruel or anything unkind or immoral, to leave the settlement of this question entirely to them. And I am glad to see that early in the history of this Chinese problem they have been wiser than we were in the early history of the negro problem in the South, when the small number of Africans on this continent constituted a condition other than that with which we are now confronted, and that they are willing to take the question up frankly and deal with it boldly and resolutely.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another thing to which I wish to call your attention. "An ounce of prevention is better worth than a pound of cure;" and the right of self-preservation carries along with it, for the nation, or the race, or the civilization, just as the right of self-defense for the individual does, the right to anticipate deadly attack. So that all these arguments of gentlemen on the floor that there are only 106,000 or 160,000 Chinese in this country do not appeal to my mind at all. When I see a gentleman over there rising in his place, with anger in his eyes, throwing his hand behind him, and I know he is armed, and I know that there is about him the deadly weapon from whose throat may soon come a deadly missile for me, I have a right to anticipate the deadly attack; and, sir, on the same principle nations have the right, and races above all others have the right, to anticipate.

And I tell you, my friends, that no feelings of philanthropy or of justice have ever called on a race which had through the centuries accumulated the fruits of civilization to surrender any part of that accumulation. No race which through heredity and evolution of capacities has received a training sufficient to make of its members men worthy to command almost every emergency has ever been justly called on to surrender one single bit of the fruits which have come to it through the centuries in that way.

"For I doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men are widen'd with the process of the suns."

The idea of Tennyson in that couplet is that through the fruits of labor and progress races and nations, like individuals, grow to become wiser and more capable of governing themselves, and the "God in History" uses, as an instrument through which to govern the world, the developed common sense and common conscience of the people.

And so the world goes on and attains true democracy in the course of time, but not immediately. It does not come all at once. It must come gradually through processes of evolution, through the ages and through the centuries. For a race which has through this process of evolution equipped itself for mastery, as well as self-government, tamely to sit down and permit itself to be inundated by Mongolians, or by any other inferior race, not thus equipped and trained, is, in my opinion, not only self-stultification but race suicide; and I, for one, shall not stand here to prevent the people of the Pacific coast from taking, with reference to this matter, a proper course which their own judgment inspires to bring about a solution of the troubles which surround them and to work out their own safety. I shall not do it unless at some time they shall demand something of me which I, in my turn, would not ask of them—something inhuman, something cruel, something wrong.

I tell you, my friends on the Pacific slope, we alone can understand you; we alone on this American continent can understand you; and you, I hope, some day, will try to understand us better; and I think we can not cultivate the acquaintance and knowledge of one another any better than by uniting frankly and fearlessly whenever these questions are presented to do the right thing, trusting our white brethren elsewhere also to do the right, until we have proof positive that they are doing wrong or until they demand something of us that is palpably wrong.

Now, my friends, I have the utmost confidence in this: I have indeed no doubt, that the white race on the Pacific coast will remember two things which William Shakespeare has said, which I am sure that we of the South will also keep in mind. One is that—*** it is excellent

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

And the second is as true of a race as it is of an individual:

*** to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

I say that is true of a race. The race that is true to its better instincts, to its own self-preservation, to the perpetuation of its own civilization and its higher ideals, although somebody may resent the mastership which it takes of others for the time being, can not be false to any race, but must necessarily, as a part of its own advancing civilization, drag the other, no less volens, along with it to a higher state than it now occupies.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to say that I shall vote for the amendments offered to the bill by these gentlemen who understand the problem with which they are confronted, who understand the race that has given them this trouble; because I believe that the Chinese race, as far as I have seen it, is but little superior to the race which I know so well, and which has given us so much trouble, with the aid and assistance very frequently of gentlemen on the other side of this House.

When a race has not been developed up to the point where it has a trained common sense and common conscience, right governmental aspirations, and right purposes—the true self-governing instinct—all law, all statute books, all mere abstractions sink like waste paper to the bottom, saturated in the water, and vanish without anything being left.

I once said upon the floor of this House, and I repeat it now, that Mississippi has not, because she could not, of course, put into her constitution one word that is at variance with the fifteenth or the fourteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States. In the opinion of Mississippians, in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the opinion of Judge Cooley, she has not done this. I do not deny that the only reason why she did not do it was because it would have been unconstitutional. Whenever you want to be honest and right about this matter of cutting off our representation, leave us free, then, of the shackles of the amendments, both the fourteenth and fifteenth. We will meet you there; but as long as they are in the Constitution we are going to try to obey them.

We have disqualified illiteracy. But in that connection I want to say this—that there is a difference between ignorance and illiteracy. We have disqualified illiteracy, but sometimes an illiterate man is tolerably well educated and sometimes a literate man is very ignorant. If you take 10,000 Scotch, English, Welsh, or Americans who can not read a letter in a book and shipwreck them to-morrow upon some island where they can find physical sustenance and support, you would find in a year or so when you went back there that they had a government—crude and imperfect, perhaps, but protecting property, conserving and safeguarding the virtue of females, defending the sanctity of home life; and you could take 10,000 Indians educated at Carlisle or at Hampton and shipwreck them in the same place and go back there in two or three years and they would have their old tribal relations.

You may take 10,000 negroes, graduates of Harvard College, if you could find them, and leave them by themselves without white guidance and without touch of the white man's current of thought and civilization. Go back in a generation and half of the men would be killed and the other half would have at least two wives each and have something very near to tribal relations themselves. But Mississippi could validly and constitutionally not make race distinctions, and she did not. She was sorry to disfranchise some good white men capable of self-government, but she had to do it to be fair with the Constitution.

The only way in which the white people of the South can be made to fail to be true to themselves and just to their inferiors would be to stir up once more, if you will, the smoldering fires of race hatred, which had died out because of lack of provocation developed under political excitement of campaigns occurring annually, biennially, and quadrennially. Then in moments of great provocation, in moments of great excitement, they might perhaps forget that, while they had "a giant's strength," they ought not "to use it as giants." But if you will let us alone—let us work out our own problems—we will try to solve them upon the theories which I have indicated.

Now, a few words just from a legal standpoint, and I shall have done with this discussion. The ostensible object of these resolutions, which go by the name of my friend from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], is to investigate certain "legal conditions." Will any man in the world tell me that that is the only object of these resolutions? Why, if that were so the constitutions and the books of laws would explain that for themselves. Is it this—to investigate the methods of carrying on the elections in the South, to see if there is intimidation and fraud? If that is the intention, then let them investigate election methods and corruptions all over the country. If it is to investigate the legal question alone, there are the books and you can investigate them.

Now, so far as Mississippi is concerned, she disfranchises nobody except for crime, which is permitted by the fourteenth amendment, and on an educational condition, which Judge Cooley says is not an "abridgment or denial of suffrage," because it is not cutting off entirely suffrage, but merely submitting the voter to conditions precedent, which he can comply with if he will take the trouble to learn how to read. And then again on the tax qualification.

The poll taxes and all other taxes must be paid. The rich man, who is generally white, has to pay taxes on every dollar he owns plus a poll tax, while the poor man has to pay the poll tax only and is not required with us, by any power of legal enforcement, to pay that sum, unless he wants to vote. Judge Cooley says that that is not an abridgment of the suffrage because it merely requires a condition precedent to be complied with which each man of ordinary thrift and worth could comply with and which is for the betterment of society. I am not quoting the language exactly, but will do so. It is from Judge Cooley on the Principles of Constitutional Law, which is an elementary book, comprehensible by everybody, and which I will insert at this place:

The second clause of the fourteenth article was intended to influence the States to bring about by their voluntary action the same result that is now accomplished by this amendment. It provided that when the right to vote was denied to any of the male inhabitants of a State, being 21 years of age and citizens of the United States, or any way abridged except for participation in crime, the basis of representation in Congress should be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens should bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State. By this the purpose was to induce the States to admit colored freemen to the privilege of suffrage by reducing the representation and influence of the States in the Federal Government in case they refused.

No opportunity occurred for testing the efficacy of this plan previous to the adoption of the fifteenth article, and it can not therefore be affirmed whether it would or would not have been successful. Important questions, however, may still arise under it. The provision is general; it is not limited to freedmen, but it applies to wherever the right to vote is denied to make citizens of the proper age, or is abridged for other causes than for participation in crime. The State of Connecticut denies the right of suffrage to all who can not read, and Massachusetts and Missouri to all who can not both read and write, and many of the States admit no one to the privilege of suffrage unless he is a taxpayer.

So in the majority of the States a citizen absent therefrom, though in the public service, can not vote, because the State requires as a condition the personal presence of the voter at the polls of his municipality. Possibly it may be said in respect to such cases that the representation of the State should be reduced in proportion to the number of those who are excluded because they can not read or write or do not pay taxes or are absent. It is not likely, however, that any such position would be sustained. To require the payment of a capitation tax is no denial of suffrage; it is demanding only the preliminary performance of public duty, and may be classed, as may also presence at the polls, with registration or the observance of any other preliminary to insure fairness and protect against fraud.

Nor can it be said to require ability to read is any denial of suffrage. To refuse to receive one's vote because he was born in some particular country rather than elsewhere, or because of his color, or because of any natural quality or peculiarity which it would be impossible for him to overcome, is plainly a denial of suffrage. But ability to read is something within the power of any man. It is not difficult to attain it, and it is no hardship to require it. On the contrary, the requirement only by indirection compels one to appropriate a personal benefit he might otherwise neglect. It denies to no man the suffrage, but the privilege is freely tendered to all, subject only to a condition that is beneficial in its performance, and light in its burden. If a property qualification, or the payment of taxes upon property when one has none to be taxed, is made a condition to suffrage, there may be room for more question.

A clause in the Mississippi constitution requires that the voter shall be able to read and write before he shall have the privilege of suffrage, and we have a clause that is called the "understanding clause." The general impression seems to be that we do not allow a man to vote in Mississippi unless he goes to a registrar and the registrar sees if he can understand the constitution. This is an error, like that other impression that there is no appeal from the decision of the registrar. Any man who can read can vote in Mississippi, and we ascertain that fact just as it is ascertained elsewhere where the qualification exists. Why, any man that can read is not required by our constitution to understand anything, upon the schoolmaster's theory that the man who reads is necessarily not ignorant. Sometimes he is very ignorant, while on the other hand sometimes an illiterate man is very knowing. That is, the so-called "understanding clause" is an extension of the franchise, not an abridgment.

I want to say right now that there is not a single clause of the Mississippi constitution that operates against the black man that does not operate against the white man subject to the same conditions precedent, whether in theory, in law, upon the statute book, or in principle or practice at the polls. I want to say right now that there are more negroes—black people, colored people—who get admitted to the suffrage in Mississippi upon the "understanding clause" than there are white people; and it grows out of race instinct. The white man who can not read or write feels that it is a humiliation for him to say so, and to ask for an understanding examination. The negro does not feel that humiliation, and goes and asks for it. There are very few who ever vote under it, either black or white; but absolutely more colored people than there are white people vote under that provision.

Now, gentlemen, if, upon the other hand, a demand that the voter shall be registered is an abridgment of the Constitution in Mississippi, it is an abridgment in every other State in the Union which requires previous registration and previous residence in the precinct or in the State or in the county. If an educational qualification is legally an abridgment, it is an abridgment in Connecticut, it is an abridgment in Massachusetts, it is an abridgment in Vermont, and if the understanding qualification mentioned in the law books, so little resorted to in practice, be an abridgment, what must the requirement be in the State of Vermont—the requirement to be "of good moral character?"

Mr. PALMER. Did the gentleman ever hear of anybody denying that proposition?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What proposition?

Mr. PALMER. That these abridgments are abridgments in every State in the North as well as in the South?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am pretty well convinced that gentlemen in their hearts, some way or other, are expecting to make some sort of a difference, or else this resolution would never have been introduced into the House, and if my friend is candid, so is he, is he not?

Mr. PALMER. No; it covers every State in the Union.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Verbally, yes; intentionally, no. I believe, as surely as I am standing here, that this resolution was introduced to strike at North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, and at them alone.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understood the gentleman to say that in his judgment the State of Mississippi had not denied or abridged the right of any male inhabitant, 21 years of age, a citizen of the United States, to vote, within the meaning of the Constitution. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understood the gentleman to say also that the method of the administration of the election laws in the State of Mississippi was altogether fair and impartial.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Undoubtedly; but your resolution does not go to the method at all. Your question is irrelevant. Still I answer in the affirmative.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Then what objection can the gentleman have, speaking from the standpoint of his own State, to any kind of an investigation of this question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Because it inaugurates once more the interference by a partisan legislative body with the suffrage question in the South instead of leaving the question to be determined by the people of the States or by the courts; it will inaugurate once more the going at each session of Congress a step further in centralization and interference with local self-government, and it will inaugurate a partisan majority report, a partisan minority report, and a disturbance of business enterprise and budding progress all over the South.

I will say to my friend that I do not frankly believe, as a Democrat, speaking from a party standpoint, that these resolutions are going to do the Republican party any good, or that they are going to do the Democratic party any harm; but they are going to do the South a great deal of harm. I love the South better than I do the Democratic party, much as I love it and am grateful to it. When the people see the sword of Damocles hanging over them, and what they regard as an effort being made in any part of the Union to disrupt the social and political conditions again by trying to bring them into a position where it may be remotely possible that we may have another carnival of vice, crime, ignorance, and Africanization, it will disturb the business of the South, producing business anarchy and threatening social chaos.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman knows that there is quite a general belief throughout the country that some States have denied or abridged the right of citizens of the United States to vote, and that they are enjoying a representation that has no constitutional basis. Now, would it not be worth much to the South and the whole country to have an investigation and to demonstrate to the country the truth of the gentleman's conclusion that these States have not disfranchised citizens and that they are administering the election laws of the State with the utmost fairness?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Surely my friend and I want to be candid and honest on this question. I certainly would not object to any fair and impartial investigation by a nonpolitical authority. But surely the gentleman does not mean to tell me that he considers a committee of the House of Representatives, appointed upon a resolution of this sort, as anything more than a bipartisan committee at best, a tribunal which will bring back two reports—a majority report and a minority report—and both of them framed solidly, every Republican for one and every Democrat for the other, along party lines.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me finish my statement and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Now, if you want to investigate, why not do it properly? The jury system in North Carolina is founded on the grandfather clause. The whole constitution hangs together. Why not make a case and carry it to the Supreme Court and let it decide the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave for just long enough to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. He knows, of course, that it is one of the important duties of the House of Representatives to apportion representation. Does he not know that the House must base its action upon its own information, and that it can only acquire information through its own agencies or organs?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I do not know that. First, because Congress has exhausted its power of apportionment until 1910; second, because I think it would be much fairer for the House to base its action on evidence collected and conclusion obtained through the courts or in some other nonpartisan way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that is a new proposition.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. In view of the proposed investigation as to the validity of the election laws of certain States, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] whether he is willing to consent at the proper time to an amendment that we may investigate as to the validity of the law of any State which in any way prohibits a candidate from accepting a nomination from more than one party?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a proposition I do not know anything about.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. Well, I will take pleasure in giving the gentleman some information on that subject, if he will permit me.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not heard any complaint—certainly not in my part of the country—with reference to that matter, and have not heard any restriction proposed upon the action of candidates in that respect.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. Well, it is, I may say, with sadness and sorrow that I inform the gentleman that that question has been raised in the great State of Kansas.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understood that the Democratic candidate for the Presidency in 1896 and in 1900 was nominated by several different political parties. But I have not understood that any constitutional objection was raised, and as a Federal question it occurs to me it is one with which this body has nothing to do.

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. I want to inform the gentleman that since that time the Republican party in the State of Kansas has said that it was a crime to accept nominations from several political parties and that it should not be repeated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman whether he does not believe that that particular question is a local one—local to the State of Kansas?

Mr. JACKSON of Kansas. No more local to the State of Kansas than the other question to Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, or any other Southern State whose election provisions you propose to investigate.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I would ask whether that—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I shall be glad to discuss the question with the gentleman some other time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask consent to insert in the RECORD the language of Cooley's Principles of Constitutional Law, to which I have referred, together with the references given by the author. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. If this concludes the general debate—

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like an opportunity to speak for about seven minutes in the morning. If I can be recognized now, I will yield the floor for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman from Indiana has ingenuity enough, if anybody should undertake to oppose his request, to get ten minutes to-morrow.

Mr. BENTON. I think we can give him ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

RECIPROCAL TRADE RELATIONS WITH CUBA.

Mr. PAYNE. By direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I report back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. 12765) to provide for reciprocal trade relations with Cuba.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the House to consider this bill on Tuesday of next week—the 8th of April, I believe. I now ask unanimous consent that any member or members of the committee may file his or their dissenting views at any time during the present week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that any member of the Committee on Ways and Means may have leave to file minority views in respect to the bill just reported at any time during the present week? The Chair hears no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12315. An act granting an increase of pension to James Todd;

H. R. 2273. An act granting a pension to Martha A. De Lamater;

H. R. 10486. An act granting a pension to Alida Payne; and

H. R. 11418. An act granting an increase of pension to Hannah T. Knowles.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

DISTRIBUTION OF COURT REPORTS.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3646) to provide for the distribution of the reports of the United States circuit court of appeals and of the circuit and of district courts; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that 200 additional copies of Senate bill 2295, the Philippine bill, reported yesterday, and the substitute may be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the number ought to be increased to at least 500 or 800. Evidently there will be a greater demand than 200 copies could supply.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I ask that 500 copies may be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest that 600 copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room, and not for distribution all around.

Mr. LODGE. Let 600 copies of the bill and substitute be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the report.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; and the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report of the majority and the views of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts as modified? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

The order was reduced to writing as follows:

Ordered, That 600 additional copies of the bill (S. 2295) "temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," as reported, together with the amendment submitted by the minority as a substitute, and Report No. 915, with the views of the minority, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a correction. On page 3 of the majority report on the Philippine bill there is a misprint of a rather serious character, to which I wish to call attention so that it may be corrected in the future print. It says "a bullion dollar of 410 grains." It ought to be, of course, "416 grains."

ANATOMICAL BOARD OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2201) for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that House bill 9206 be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, the pending bill provides for a tax of 10 cents per pound on oleomargarine instead of a tax of the 2 cents now imposed. Ostensibly it is a revenue measure, but if Senators will carefully study the testimony given before the House and Senate committees by the friends and advocates of the measure, they will have to admit that it is intended to be repressive legislation, the real purpose of which is to destroy the oleomargarine industry.

It is true that the bill provides a 10-cent tax only on so much of this product as is colored in imitation of butter, while for the uncolored article it provides a tax of one-quarter of a cent. The supporters of the bill argue from this fact that this legislation would be in the interest of the consumer by cheapening the product, approximately, 2 cents a pound.

Mr. President, this whole question has been carefully considered by the Committee on Agriculture of both the House and Senate, both during the last Congress and the present one. The hearings before the committees of the last Congress covered some 875 pages, while the hearings of the present session cover some 500 pages. As a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture I have had the opportunity of following closely everything that has been said in favor of and in opposition to this measure. I am frank to say that at no time have I noticed any anxiety on the part of the friends regarding the revenue features of the bill. Not a man argued before the committee that this enormous tax was needed by the Government, nor did one of them feel sufficiently interested in the revenue feature to even approximately state how much revenue would be derived from this source. Their sole purpose was plainly to get a law upon the statute books that will destroy this industry.

I am as desirous as are any of the friends of this measure to compel the manufacturers of oleomargarine to sell their product to the consumer for just what it is. I will go as far as anyone in supporting legislation to bring about such a result, providing such legislation is not clearly for the purpose of destroying a legitimate industry in order to build up another. The pending measure, to my mind, has such a purpose, and I am opposed to it because of that purpose.

The friends of the bill argue that the manufacturer of oleomargarine ought to be denied the right to color his product yellow, or, as they put it, in imitation of butter. They want to deny these people the right of coloring their product, but at the same time hold that they themselves have a right to color their product (butter) to suit the fancy of the consumer. Mr. W. D. Hoard, ex-governor of Wisconsin and now president of the National Dairy Union, while testifying before the House committee, stated that he regarded the coloring of oleomargarine as an infraction of the buttermen's trade-mark; when asked if butter had a particular color why coloring matter was added, he replied, "Because, as I have said, the demand for the market article may be one shade or another of this particular yellow. For instance, in New Orleans the taste of the market is for a very deep color. In Boston they call for a very light color, a straw color." Right here, the chief advocate of this measure admits that color is a matter of fancy or taste, and that butter is colored to suit such a fancy. Still he denies the manufacturer of oleomargarine the right to cater to the fancy of the consumer of his product, and he demands that the oleomargarine consumer pay a penalty of 10 cents a pound, if he prefers it colored in "any shade of yellow." He may eat it in its natural color by paying one-quarter of a cent, but if he fancies it in any shade of yellow he must pay a tax of forty times as much.

Other friends of the bill contend that the consumer will soon accustom himself to white oleomargarine, and when once accustomed to it will relish it fully as well. Thus butter must be colored to suit the fancy of the consumer and in order to find a more ready sale, but as to oleomargarine the consumer must adapt himself to its natural color or pay 10 cents additional. Is this justice? Why should Congress permit one industry the right to cater to the fancy of the consumer of its product and deny the same right to another? Because, say the friends of the bill, if you allow the oleomargarine people to color their product in any shade of yellow they will sell it as butter, and this is what we want to prevent them from doing.

According to the testimony given before the Senate Committee, average quality oleomargarine can be produced for about 8 cents a pound. Add to this the present tax of 2 cents, and its first cost will be 10 cents. The cost of certain grades will be somewhat less, while the best grades will come somewhat higher. This product is sold to the consumer from about 13 to 20 cents a pound. Now, under the proposed law we must add 8 cents a pound and the ordinary percentage to the aforesaid price, which, roughly estimated, would make the price to the consumer from 22 to 28 cents a pound, a price equal to that of ordinary butter.

Mr. President, if there is an incentive for the manufacturers of oleomargarine to violate the present law, will not an additional tax add to the temptation? Under the present law this product is put upon the market so cheap that it can be afforded by almost the poorest of our citizens. Add 10 cents a pound to its cost and it is beyond the poor man's reach and enters into competition directly with the butter product sold to that class of our citizens that can afford to pay 25 to 30 cents a pound for this sort of luxury.

The advocates of the measure now before us are indirectly doing more harm to the dairy interests than all the oleomargarine manufacturers could under ordinary circumstances do in a score of years. For years past there has been in the minds of the people a violent prejudice against oleomargarine. Nothing the manufacturer could say in favor of his product would have, for a long time to come, removed this aversion. But when the advocates of this measure began to attack this product it was necessary for the manufacturers to defend themselves, and the most natural way for them to do this successfully was by asking that their product be subjected to the most severe analytical tests, and when such tests were had it was plainly demonstrated that this product was a wholesome and nutritious article of diet.

According to a report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, May 14, 1900, the following are the percentages of ingredients used in the production of oleomargarine in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899:

	Per cent.		Per cent.
Neutral lard.....	34.37	Stearin .....	0.07
Oleo oil .....	26.82	Glucose .....	.03
Cotton-seed oil .....	4.77	Milk .....	15.55
Sesame .....	.53	Salt .....	7.42
Coloring matter.....	.16	Butter oil.....	1.76
Sugar .....	.12	Butter .....	1.72
Glycerin.....	.01	Cream .....	3.86

Experiments as to the relative digestibility of butter and oleomargarine were made by Adolph Mayer, a German chemist, as early as 1883; another German chemist, N. Kienzel, made further experiments in this line in 1898; a third experiment was made by Dr. H. Lühring in 1897, and their findings are as follows:

	Mayer, 1883.	Kienzel, 1898.	Lühring, 1897.	Average of all.
Digestibility of—	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Butter.....	98.40-97.10	96.65	95.69	96.96
Oleomargarine.....	96.40-95.80	95.64-95.72	96.68-96.70-96.93	96.27

Mr. President, I believe this phase of the question was discussed yesterday, and various statements were made as regards the relative digestibility of butter and oleomargarine. From this table it appears that as far back as 1883, when oleo was considered to be an unhealthful article, it was found that the digestibility of butter was 98.40, and on another test 97.10. Oleomargarine at that time was 96.40 and 95.80 per cent. In 1898 the butter test showed that the digestibility of butter was 96.65, and on two tests of oleomargarine 95.72 and 95.64. In 1899 Lühring found that the per cent of digestibility for butter was 95.69, while three tests made of oleomargarine showed that the percentage was 96.68, 96.70, and 96.93, in every instance more than 1 per cent above the digestibility of butter.

We find from this report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that oleomargarine is made almost wholly from the products of the farm. Neutral lard, oleo oil made from the caul fat of the beef, cotton-seed oil, milk, butter oil, butter, and cream enter into the manufacture of this article to the amount of about 90 per cent. I am aware that for years the dairy interests have systematically manufactured sentiment in favor of this sort of a measure among the farmers of this country. They have urged them through a system of postal-card petition to ask their representatives in Congress to support this measure. These petitions state in round numbers the total output of oleomargarine. They also contain a remonstrance against the passage of what is called the "Wadsworth substitute," which is denounced as a "step backward in dairy legislation." They give the farmer to understand that something terrible is going to happen to the dairy cow if Congress fails to pass the so-called Grout or Grout-Tawney bill. They are careful not to tell all. The argument is wholly one-sided. The dairy papers one and all harp on the same string, and the consumers, who have no organ to defend their interests, are unheard.

Mr. President, being a farmer myself, my sympathies are largely with this class of our citizens. However, in a matter of this kind I do not forget that all my constituents are not farmers, neither do I forget that I am not commissioned here to legislate solely for any particular section or class, but under my oath must do justice to all. Furthermore, I do not see where the farmer will derive any great benefit from the enactment of such a law. If the ingredients of oleomargarine were substances wholly foreign to the farm such a claim might be sustained. Nearly 25 per cent of the ingredients of this product are milk and cream, and all of 90 per cent are products of the farm. Yet the dairy interests say this bill is framed in the interests of the farmer and designed to protect him.

I will state again, the proponents of the bill use large figures in stating their case to the country; they do not go into particulars, but leave the story half told. They inform the dairy farmer that the output of oleomargarine for the past year was more than 100,000,000 pounds, but they are silent on the output of butter.

Mr. C. Y. Knight, secretary of the Dairy Union, stated before the Senate committee a year ago that the total annual production of butter in the United States was approximately fifteen hundred million pounds, fifteen times greater than the amount of oleomargarine manufactured. Thus, by giving to the public the output of oleomargarine only, the figures appear enormous, but placed beside the butter figures they do not appear anywhere near so startling. The friends of the bill also state in a general way to the dairyman that oleomargarine is gradually cheapening butter. Before the Senate committee a year ago, in support of this contention, Mr. Knight filed a diagram to be printed with his remarks. This diagram shows the production of oleomargarine in the United States for the years 1890 to 1900, and the average wholesale price of butter, by months, in the New York market for that period. I have studied this diagram carefully, and must confess I do not find it bears out what the gentleman tried to show.

According to this diagram, in 1890 the output of oleomargarine was 32,000,000 pounds. The butter prices for that year ranged from 15 to 27 cents a pound. The output of oleomargarine for 1891 was 48,000,000 pounds, and butter ranged that year from 18 to 31 cents. In 1892, 52,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were produced, and butter brought from 19 to 32 cents. In 1893 the output of oleomargarine was 72,000,000 pounds, and butter prices ranged from 21 to 33 cents. Thus in four years, although the annual output of oleomargarine had more than doubled, during the same period the butter prices had gradually risen something like 6 cents a pound. In 1894 the production of oleomargarine was 65,000,000 pounds, and butter prices ranged from 17 to 27 cents a pound. In 1895 the output of oleomargarine was 54,000,000 pounds, and butter ranged from 20 to 25 cents.

In 1896, 48,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured, and butter was worth from 15 to 24 cents. Right here it will be noticed that although the output of oleomargarine was 24,000,000 pounds less than in 1893 butter prices also ranged from 6 to 9 cents lower. In 1897, 48,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were produced, and butter ranged from 15 to 23 cents a pound. In 1898 we find the output of oleomargarine amounting to 60,000,000 pounds and butter prices ranging from 17 to 23 cents. In 1899 the output of oleomargarine was nearly 100,000,000 pounds, and butter ranged from 18 to 27 cents a pound—the highest price reached since 1893—and that, too, despite the fact that the output of oleomargarine was greater during this year than in any preceding year.

Mr. President, from these figures, furnished us by the most ardent advocate of this measure, in the shape of a diagram, it would appear that the dairy interests have little to fear from this much maligned product.

Butter makers are from year to year learning to improve the quality of their product. Exporters testified before the Senate committee that some ten years ago we were not able to compete with other butter countries in foreign markets. They claim that to-day we successfully compete with any country in the world. As the butter makers are striving to make a better article of butter, so is the owner of the dairy herd continually improving his cows and his method of feeding, and, like every other American industry, the dairyman and the maker of butter will keep ahead of the procession.

Mr. H. C. Adams, who appeared before the committee in the interest of the dairy people, was asked, "Is not your industry more prosperous now than it ever was before?" He replied, "Yes, sir." Oleomargarine will never displace butter. The latter will always be preferred by the people who can afford to purchase it, and oleomargarine will only supply the table of the man who is so unfortunate as not to be able to afford butter.

Mr. President, the honorable chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. PROCTOR] stated that this bill cheapened oleomargarine approximately 2 cents a pound, and thus benefited the consumer. Many other champions of this measure make the same claim for it. They all contend that the people will accustom themselves to the natural color of the product, and it will therefore not in any way bring about the results predicted by the opponents of this measure. If these gentlemen are correct in their surmises, I will warrant that the principal advocates of this measure will be here at the opening of the Fifty-eighth Congress asking further protection. Not one of these men will rest until the last oleomargarine factory in this country is closed, unless, perchance, the dairy farmers should refuse further to contribute to keep up this sort of propaganda.

If Senators will study the testimony of the advocates of the measure they can not fail to see that their sole interest and object is to destroy the oleomargarine industry. They will not be satisfied with legislation that restricts the sale of it as oleomargarine only, or legislation that compels it to stand on its own merit. They are confident that this bill will destroy the industry, and if it fails to accomplish what they desire they will return here and clamor for legislation more stringent than the measure now under consideration. A member of the House committee asked Mr. Hoard "whether this bill would be demanded if, after its passage, just as much oleomargarine would be manufactured and put on the market as is now manufactured and sold." Mr. Hoard replied, "In that case, sir, I would come before Congress and demand a still higher tax." Mr. Knight in a letter to a Virginia dairyman wrote as follows:

Now is the time for you to clip the fangs of the mighty octopus of the oleomargarine manufacturers who are ruining the dairy interests of this country by manufacturing and selling, in defiance of law, a spurious article in imitation of pure butter. We have a remedy almost at hand which will eliminate the manufacture of this article from the food-product list.

Mr. Adames, pure-food commissioner of the State of Wisconsin, in his testimony before the committee on March 7, 1900, said:

There is no use beating about the bush in this matter. We want to pass this law and drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of the business.

Mr. Hoard, before the House committee, stated:

In plain words, this is repressive taxation.

Mr. Knight, secretary of the Dairy Union, before the last Congressional election, went so far in his fanaticism as to take an active part in antagonizing the reelection of some members of the House who did not favor a measure of this kind. The following letter was written by him to a constituent of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives:

THE NATIONAL DAIRY UNION,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, 188 SOUTH WATER STREET,
Chicago, Ill., October 18, 1900.

Mr. P. P. HUBBARD, Perry, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: You ask me to what extent Congressman WADSWORTH opposed the Grout bill. Well, if you have ever been in court and observed a lawyer defending a criminal you can understand how he fought for the oleomargarine makers. He was the most active opponent we had in Congress. He spent more time lobbying against our bill than even the acknowledged agent of the oleomargarine makers—Lorimer, of Chicago—to whose tender mercies WADSWORTH consigned the Grout bill when it was referred to his committee, that it might be smothered.

As to WADSWORTH's bill, offered as a substitute for the Grout bill, it is nothing more nor less than a deep-laid plan to break down completely all anticolor laws, including New York. His bill makes 1-pound packages original packages so they can be sold under protection of the interstate-commerce laws by the retailer with a $48 license. Only wholesalers paying $480 can sell an original package now, and they can not sell less than 10 pounds. While no oleomargarine is made in his State, he has conceived a great affection for the kind of oleomargarine that is an exact counterfeit of butter, forbidden by New York, and which defrauds the public everywhere, and the only kind we are seeking to suppress.

WADSWORTH's friends in Congress were amazed at his attitude in this matter. His conduct was unprecedented. No Congressman representing a Northern agricultural district has ever been known to take such an aggressive stand against the farmers of his district in face of such floods of petitions and no support whatever from his own people in his position.

WADSWORTH, with his bill, is the most dangerous enemy the dairymen have in the world. As chairman of the Agricultural Committee he has certain prestige. If he is returned to Congress by the votes of the farmers of his district, thereby winning their approval of his course, it will be bad for us. His reelection, unless with a greatly reduced majority, will be a victory for the stock yards and oleomargarine fraud of Chicago, and a death knell to the farmer's influence in Congress.

The National Dairy Union, however, is not in politics, and its officers happen to be of the same political faith as WADSWORTH. Our organization is merely for the purpose of urging measures in protection of the farmer who keeps cows, and furnishing information to them regarding the records of Congressmen upon such measures.

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. Y. KNIGHT,
Secretary National Dairy Union.

This Mr. Knight is amazed at the attitude of a distinguished member of Congress! He calls his conduct unprecedented. He does not understand that anyone might have honest convictions on a question of this sort. It is inconceivable to him that any Representative should have the courage to stand out against a made-to-order flood of manufactured petitions. Unless a man is willing to surrender his honest convictions and bow to the will of the interests represented by this Mr. Knight, he must be defeated. This Mr. Knight wants men in Congress who have no convictions unless they are in line with those he has so long been hired for holding. He has earned his living for so many years as a paid promoter that he is now firmly convinced that Senators and Members who may differ with him are acknowledged agents of the oleomargarine makers. He even accuses the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture of lobbying against "our bill."

Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture I can say that there has been no evidence or indication of any undue interest on the part of any member of the House of Representatives either for or against the proposed measure. As for the distinguished chairman, whom the impeccable Mr. Knight discovers to be a "lobbyist," I will say that he appeared before the Senate committee, but only for the purpose of replying to Mr. Adams, food commissioner of Wisconsin, who had stated before the Senate committee that he had not used the language attributed to him in the House minority report; also to reply to this Mr. Knight's statement that he, Knight, had not written to the Virginia dairymen a letter quoted in the same report. I will quote the chairman's statement on this occasion:

Mr. Chairman, I saw a statement in the paper yesterday which puts the report of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture of the House in a rather dubious odor; that is, the contradiction of Mr. Adams that he ever stated to that committee that there was no need of beating around the bush; that the object of this second section of the bill was to drive the oleomargarine manufacturers out of business. Mr. Adams is right in the statement that there was no stenographer present at that time, owing to an oversight. The remark was taken down, however, by a member of that committee at the time, because its very boldness attracted the attention of the whole committee to it.

Another contradiction made yesterday was by Mr. Knight, secretary of the National Dairymen's Union, that he never wrote that letter to the Virginia farmers. That letter, or a copy of it, is in the hands of a member of the committee, who has not returned from the West as yet. If it is considered of enough importance, the copy of the letter or the original will be produced. I say this simply to place the minority report of the committee in the proper light.

Another matter, which is personal to myself, and I only call attention to it because this man Knight has used it simply for purposes of intimidation. He says that my majority in my district was cut down over 2,000. That is a falsehood. My majority is the largest I have ever had there, except in 1896.

The chairman of the House committee needs no defense at my hands. The large majority with which he was returned at the last election is ample proof of the highest esteem in which he is held by his constituents. Coming from an agricultural district, his reelection by an increased majority seems to me to be conclusive proof that the New York farmer is not scared out of his wits by Mr. Knight's cry of "wolf."

Mr. President, I am not here to defend the oleomargarine manufacturer nor the dealers who sell this article to the consumer. It is possible that a considerable quantity of this product is sold as butter. From the evidence it appears that the city of Chicago is the place where the greatest amount of deception is practiced. Noticeable instances are also cited from the larger Ohio cities and the principal cities in the State of Pennsylvania. From the testimony it also appears that these three States consume about 38 per cent of the total output of oleomargarine. The advocates of the bill claim that in these particular States the State laws are openly violated and that the sentiment is such that no convictions can be had; hence they say that it is necessary to enact a Federal law that will make it possible for the Federal Government to keep these people in the path of righteousness.

Now it seems to me if these three great States are so indifferent to the enforcement of their own laws on this subject, it must be that laws of this kind are not sufficiently popular to arouse the public demand for their enforcement, or if the existing laws are defective, to demand that their legislature enact such laws as can be enforced. At any rate it does not appear to me that the failure of these States to enforce their laws warrants interference by the Federal Government.

Thirty of the 45 States have anti-color laws. These are Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. The States of Vermont and West Virginia have so-called "pink laws." The States of Rhode Island, Nevada, and Idaho have branding laws, and the States of Arkansas, Indiana, Louisiana, and Mississippi have label laws. The States of Kansas and Wyoming have no laws governing the manufacture and sale of this product.

If State grand juries will not indict nor State trial juries convict, what assurance have we that Federal juries will do otherwise?

According to a table furnished by the Treasury Department the State of New York consumes about a quarter of 1 per cent of the oleomargarine produced in the United States. Still it does not appear that New York has laws any more stringent than Illinois, Ohio, or Pennsylvania, all of which have so-called "anti-color" laws. Thus it seems that New York does not need the assistance of the Federal Government in dealing with this evil. This State enforces its own laws and works out its own salvation.

A study of this table shows that a number of other States are equally successful in controlling this so-called "octopus." This table gives the quantity of oleomargarine shipped into each State for the fiscal year ended 1899, the number of dealers in each State, and the percentage of the whole product consumed in each State. I ask leave to insert the table in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator, and the table will be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The table referred to is as follows:

Quantity of oleomargarine shipped into each State for fiscal year ended June 30, 1899.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, this latter table shows that the amount shipped into and consumed in the different States is much the same as in the first table; some States consuming a very large amount while in others the consumption is merely nominal.

A study of these tables shows that New York is not the only State that successfully controls this article. Iowa seems to be able to enforce its "anticolor" law, the consumption in this State being one-tenth of 1 per cent.

My own State, which has only a "branding" law, consumed during the fiscal year 1899 but seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent, and, according to the quarterly statement inserted, its consumption for the present fiscal year will be fully one-third less.

The State of Washington, with its 500,000 people, consumed during the fiscal year 1899 but eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent, which is about 2 ounces per capita for the year, and, according to the reports for the first quarter of the present fiscal year, the consumption in this State will be fully one-third less than for the year ending June 30, 1899. Washington, like New York, appears to be able to enforce its own laws.

The Genesee News, a paper published near my home in Idaho, gives an account of a case just decided by the supreme court of the State of Washington, which shows that this State is fully capable of looking after the enforcement of its own laws. The article is as follows:

Renovated butter, unless plainly branded as such, can not be sold in the State of Washington and ought not to be in any other State. Three hundred pounds of the renovated article, consigned by Hathaway & Co., of Sioux City, Iowa, to R. Brown, a wholesaler of Spokane, were seized by Food Commissioner McDonald October 14, 1900, because the butter was not plainly marked "Renovated butter," in accordance with the Washington pure-food law. Hathaway & Co. sued in replevin to recover the butter, or its value, and the lower court gave them a judgment. Upon appeal of the case the supreme court has just handed down a decision reversing the decision of the lower court and upholds the commissioner for his action in every particular.

It is true the proposed legislation is of the same sumptuary character as the law it proposes to amend. Still there is a vast difference between the present law and the proposed measure. The tax imposed by the present law, without being a serious burden, gives the Federal authorities all the powers necessary to carry out its provisions. The proposed measure can do no more in that particular direction; but the additional tax provided for in this measure can, and the advocates of the measure fondly hope will, practically annihilate the oleomargarine industry and deprive the people of a cheap and healthful article of food.

The tax imposed by the present law perhaps produces some little revenue, but the most of the income from that source is needed to carry out its provisions. The 10-cent tax proposed by the bill under consideration is said to be prohibitive, while the tax imposed on the uncolored article, if such an article ever finds a market, will in all probability not be sufficient to pay the cost of supervising the manufacture and sale of these goods.

Secretary Gage, when asked in the Committee on Agriculture about the revenue features of this bill, said:

Of course I only feel at liberty to state my views as the Secretary of the Treasury, and only upon that part of the bill which involves the question of revenue. I might have personal views which go far beyond those, but you would probably not care much about them.

There is, in my opinion, an objection to the bill on either theory. If it is a revenue producer, it is superfluous; we do not need it. If it is not a revenue producer, then the title of the bill is a misnomer, and it is inoperative in the name of revenue. It seems to me that on either theory there are serious objections to it. I think that covers all I care to say directly on the subject.

The senior Senator from Kansas stated the other day that the Senate Committee on Manufactures in its investigation had divided food products into two classes. I will quote the Senator's language: "One where the adulteration is deleterious to health and injurious, and we wish to abolish that class wholly and altogether. Another class is where it is merely a sophistication and a fraud upon the pocketbook."

Now, if the Senator does not consider oleomargarine as belonging to the first class, and hence not being deleterious to health, why should it be put in the class that is to be destroyed? It is because of my belief that this measure will accomplish its destruction that I can not give it my support. I believe that the substitute offered by the Senator from Mississippi on behalf of the minority of the committee will accomplish all that is necessary and all that the real friends of the dairy interests hope to accomplish. The provisions of the substitute are such as to guard against any possible fraud. Section 2 of the substitute reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That all oleomargarine shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of one and two pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the word "Oleomargarine" in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of oleomargarine shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the word "Oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers and marked, stamped, and branded with the word "Oleomargarine" printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each one and two pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the word "Oleomargarine," with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, gave it as his opinion that the substitute would be an efficient safeguard against fraud; that the probability of anyone selling this product as butter would be reduced to a minimum.

The substitute provides a penalty more severe than the bill itself. In the bill the fine for each offense is not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, and the imprisonment not to be less than thirty days nor more than six months. The substitute provides for a minimum fine of $100, the maximum being the same as provided in the bill; the imprisonment is the same as in the committee measure. The substitute, however, provides in addition to these fines and penalties that for a second and every subsequent offense the offender shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and that he shall be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years.

Mr. President, one of the peculiarities of the majority bill under consideration is its section 2, which provides as follows:

SEC. 2. That the first clause of section 3 of an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, be amended by adding thereto after the word "oleomargarine," at the end of said clause, the following words:

"And any person that sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for the use and consumption of others, except to his own family and guests thereof without compensation, who shall add to or mix with such oleomargarine any ingredient or coloration that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow shall also be held to be a manufacturer of oleomargarine within the meaning of said act, and subject to the provisions thereof."

A serious objection to this section of the bill is the provision that no ingredient shall be added that causes it to look like butter of any shade of yellow. Since in the manufacture of this product a number of articles are used that are yellow, it would appear that this provision was inserted for the express purpose of prohibiting the use of these particular ingredients. Neutral lard is the only ingredient that enters into the manufacture of this product that is pure white. Oleo oil, made from the caul fat of the beef, is of a very decided yellow color. Cotton-seed oil, butter oil, milk, cream, and butter are used in the manufacture of this product. All of them are more or less yellow, and it is a question whether the makers of oleomargarine would be allowed to use them. Certainly more than 50 per cent of the materials that go to make up the component parts of this product may be eliminated by this provision.

I doubt whether there is to-day upon our statute books a law that contains provisions more objectionable than some of those in this bill. Certainly no existing revenue measure is so drastic. Even the laws governing the manufacture and sale of liquors are less severe.

There is one provision of the pending bill which at first glance appears to be mild. Under it every man, for the use of his own family and guests without compensation, may color his own oleomargarine to suit his own fancy. It is evident that this provision is intended as a sop to the poor man who does not think he ought to be denied the right to have his oleomargarine look as he likes it and to eat it as he relishes it. If this bill becomes a law there will probably be given to every purchaser of oleomargarine a bottle of coloring matter and directions for using it. Every good housewife will then at once proceed to educate herself in the line of dyeing her little old pound of white oleomargarine to make it look as she fancies it.

But the serious feature of this provision is that it subjects the house of almost every man to the espionage of the revenue officer. Wherever a family takes in one or two boarders we will find a revenue officer eyeing the premises with suspicion. It would not only affect the hotels and regular boarding houses, but every house in which there is a temporary boarder might be subjected to odious domiciliary visits.

The number of officers necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill is a matter of speculation. There is little doubt but that this particular provision will be frequently violated. The class of houses that take in boarders at from $3 to $5 a week can not very well afford butter when it costs from 28 to 35 cents a pound. Neither can they afford to serve colored oleomargarine at the price it will sell for when subjected to a 10-cent tax.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the proposed bill because it would injure and hamper a legitimate industry; because I believe it is designed to make impossible the manufacture of a wholesome article of food—a food necessary to the comforts of that class of our citizens who can not afford the luxury of dairy butter. I consider the substitute offered by the senior Senator from Mississippi the better measure in every respect. No law that we can frame will meet the approbation of all, nor will any law entirely prevent fraud and deception. I believe that this substitute would accomplish all that is necessary, and all that the dairy interests ought to ask.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this bill is a protest against fraud and a vindication of the simplest principles of common integrity.

It aims to protect an honest and legitimate industry from the encroachments of a dishonest business—a business that is masquerading under false colors and depending for success upon misrepresentation and duplicity.

It asks no special favors for the dairy products of the country, but demands that the mixture known as oleomargarine shall be sold for what it is, and not under the false pretense that it is genuine butter.

That is all the bill aims to accomplish, and no special pleading will prove to the contrary.

Thirty States of the forty-five have anticolor laws, and the proposition is to incorporate the same principle into a Federal statute the better to regulate the manufacture and sale of the product known as oleomargarine. To avoid all question as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation it is made a revenue law by the imposition of a tax on the manufactured article.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL ARGUMENT.

Mr. President, as might have been expected, the constitutional argument has been brought into this discussion. Indeed, whoever knew of attempted legislation in the interest of the farmers that was not met by constitutional objections? The poorer the cause the more strenuously is the Constitution relied on to help its advocates out of their difficulties.

According to those who always invoke the Constitution, it is constitutional to dig out shallow streams for the benefit of prospective commerce, but it is unconstitutional to make a subvention in behalf of steamship lines to build up our merchant marine and extend commerce already established.

It is constitutional to expend millions upon millions of dollars on certain rivers, largely to protect private property from inundation and destruction, but it is unconstitutional to appropriate a single dollar for the protection of private property differently situated.

It is constitutional to enact pure-food laws to protect the people from adulterated and harmful articles of food, but it is unconstitutional to require oleomargarine to be sold for what it really is, thus protecting the consumer from palpable imposition and fraud.

As I have listened to learned and elaborate disquisitions on the Constitution and noticed that that instrument is invoked in behalf of the most inconsistent propositions, it has occurred to me that a certain distinguished Presidential candidate who declared that the tariff was a local question might well have included the Constitution in his characterization.

Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Plumley case, swept away this sophistry in a single sentence when he said, "The Constitution of the United States does not secure to anyone the privilege of defrauding the public." And he further declared that the deception which this bill aims to prevent is "an offense against society."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] in the able speech he delivered a few days ago denounced this bill as "unconstitutional, unjust, immoral, and dishonest," and I wondered that he did not add "wicked, cowardly, cruel, and abominable." It seemed to me at the time that his adjectives did not do justice to his feelings and that he stopped far short of his opportunities. As the learned and distinguished Senator pictured the wickedness of the proposed legislation I was reminded of the good old woman who said that her boy was totally depraved and growing worse every day. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Mississippi declared the bill to be unconstitutional, yet in reply to an interrogatory of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] he admitted that the courts would probably not agree with him on that point, so the advocates of this measure need have no serious fears that the courts will declare the law to be in violation of the Federal Constitution.

SOME VETOES.

I recall the fact, Mr. President, that nearly half a century ago New Hampshire gave the United States a President. He was a very able man and a Democrat of Democrats. Like the Senator from Mississippi, he was a strict constructionist, and never lost an opportunity to summon the Constitution to his aid. On May 3, 1854, President Pierce, in the exercise of his constitutional prerogative, vetoed a bill entitled "An act making a grant of public lands to the several States for the benefit of indigent insane persons," declaring the legislation to be clearly unconstitutional. If I mistake not, at this very session of Congress we have passed bills making appropriations of a similar kind, and no one ventured to suggest that they were unconstitutional.

In August of the same year President Pierce vetoed a bill "making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works." In this veto message he took occasion to say that he was opposed to a general system of internal improvements. Not content with that message, which was written near the close of the session, he sent in a supplemental message during the early days of the next session, which was an elaborate exposition of his reasons for vetoing the bill. That message covers 14 printed pages, from which I will read three brief extracts. President Pierce said:

It is quite obvious that if there be any constitutional power which authorizes the construction of "railroads and canals" by Congress, the same power must comprehend turnpikes and ordinary carriage roads; nay, it must extend to the construction of bridges, to the draining of marshes, to the erection of levees, to the construction of canals of irrigation; in a word, to all the possible means of the material improvement of the earth, by developing its natural resources anywhere and everywhere, even within the proper jurisdiction of the several States. But if there be any constitutional power thus comprehensive in its nature, must not the same power embrace within its scope other kinds of improvements of equal utility in themselves and equally important to the whole country? President Jefferson, while intimating the expediency of so amending the Constitution as to comprise objects of physical progress and well being, does not fail to perceive that "other objects of public improvement," including "public education" by name, belong to the same class of powers. In fact, not only public instruction, but hospitals, establishments of science and art, libraries, and, indeed, everything appertaining to the internal welfare of the country, are just as much objects of internal improvement, or, in other words, of internal utility, as canals and railways.

Again President Pierce declared:

From whatever point of view, therefore, the subject is regarded, whether as a question of express or implied power, the conclusion is the same, that Congress has no constitutional authority to carry on a system of internal improvements; and in this conviction the system has been steadily opposed by the soundest expositors of the functions of the Government.

And then he emphasized his views in these words:

If an appropriation for improving the navigability of a river or deepening or protecting a harbor have reference to military or naval purposes, then its rightfulness, whether in amount or in the objects to which it is applied, depends, manifestly, on the military or naval exigency, and the subject-matter affords its own measure of legislative discretion. But if the appropriation for such an object have no distinct relation to the military or naval wants of the country, and is wholly, or even mainly, intended to promote the revenue from commerce, then the very vagueness of the proposed purpose of the expenditure constitutes a perpetual admonition of reserve and caution. Through disregard of this it is undeniable that in many cases appropriations of this nature have been made unwisely, without accomplishing beneficial results commensurate with the cost, and sometimes for evil rather than good, independently of their dubious relation to the Constitution.

These were the views of a Democratic President forty-eight years ago, but how widely they differ from the views of Democrats of the present day. The Senator from Mississippi does not accept them, for he will vote for the river and harbor bill, as I shall, which will soon be presented to this body, and which will appropriate many millions of the people's money for the very purposes that President Pierce declared to be unconstitutional.

And it is interesting to note the fact that two years later President Pierce vetoed a bill which proposed "the removal of obstructions to navigation in the mouth of the Mississippi River at the Southwest Pass and Pass à l'Ouvre," saying:

These objections apply to the whole system of internal improvements, whether such improvements consist of works on land or in navigable waters, either of the seacoast or of the interior lakes or rivers.

Shortly after that he vetoed bills "for continuing the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi River," "for the improvement of the navigation of the Patapsco River and to render the port of Baltimore accessible to the war steamers of the United States," for "an appropriation for deepening the channel over the St. Clair Flats in the State of Michigan," and for "an appropriation for deepening the channel over the flats of the St. Marys River in the State of Michigan."

I cite these historical incidents simply for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that it is no new thing for the Constitution to be invoked in opposition to measures that the people approve. The constitutional arguments of Franklin Pierce long since ceased to have any potency, and the constitutional arguments of my genial and able friend the Senator from Mississippi and others against this bill will in due time be relegated to the limbo of forgotten things.

It does not seem necessary to waste time in refuting the charge of the Senator from Mississippi that the bill is unjust, immoral, and dishonest. As I understand the bill, it is precisely the opposite of that, its chief aim and purpose being to compel the manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine to be just, moral, and honest; to discontinue the perpetration of fraud, and conduct their business squarely and legitimately. That seems to be the underlying principle of the bill, and surely that is commendable.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, gave the statistics of the manufacture of oleomargarine in detail in his opening speech on this bill, and it is therefore unnecessary that I should repeat them. It is sufficient on that point for me to say that this is becoming a great industry, which if honestly conducted has a right to demand from the Government fair and impartial treatment, but which if dishonestly conducted should be treated as an outlaw and a fraud on society.

It appears from the reports of the Twelfth Census that the production of oleomargarine increased from 32,324,032 pounds in 1890 to 107,045,028 pounds in 1900, the value of the product in 1900 being $12,499,812. The taxes under existing law are a general tax of 2 cents per pound, a manufacturer's tax of $600, a wholesaler's tax of $480, and a retailer's tax of $48. The aggregate tax on the product paid to the Government in the year 1900 was $2,543,785. The present bill does not interfere with the schedule of taxes imposed on the manufacturer, the wholesaler, or the retailer, the proposed changes in the law being that on oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter the tax shall be increased to 10 cents per pound, while if sold in its natural color, so that it can be easily distinguished from butter, the tax shall be reduced from 2 cents to one-fourth of a cent per pound. That is all there is to the bill, and I find in it nothing that I can not indorse and approve.

RENOVATED BUTTER.

I am pleased to see that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS], a member of the committee, has offered an amendment in reference to so-called "renovated" or "process" butter, imposing taxes on the product, and providing adequate penalties for a violation of the statute. The proposed amendment seems to be better adapted for the purpose than the provision in the House bill. It strikes me that this "renovated" butter, made out of the odds and ends of various substances, to which are added chemical agents, is even a greater evil than the fraudulent features of the oleomargarine business; and I venture to express the earnest hope that whatever provision goes in this bill concerning it will be fully adequate to remedy the existing evil. The purpose of this legislation being to protect pure dairy products from imposition and fraud, it becomes our manifest duty to strictly regulate the manufacture and sale of butter compounded from rancid and unhealthy substances and made palatable by the aid of the laboratory and the addition of poisonous chemicals.

THE DAIRY INTERESTS.

The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], in his entertaining, instructive, and eloquent speech on this bill, left little for any of us to say regarding the dairy interests of the country. I believe, however, that he did not give the statistics of the dairy products of American farms, as shown by figures recently promulgated by the Director of the Census. They are as follows:

The complete census statistics of dairy products show that of the 5,739,657 farms in the country, 4,514,210 report dairy cows and dairy products, and that in 1899 the total dairy product had a valuation of $472,309,255. Of the farms reporting dairy cows and product, 357,578 were classed as dairy farms, having derived at least 40 per cent of their gross income from dairy products. The number of dairy cows was 17,139,674.

The receipts from dairy products sold aggregated $281,629,958, and products consumed on the farm were valued at $190,730,297. There were produced from the dairy cows reported a total of 7,266,392,674 gallons of milk, an average of 424 gallons per cow. Of this milk, 2,134,915,542 gallons were sold for which the farmers received $184,842,232. The farmers also report the sale of 20,768,662 gallons of cream, for which they received $8,838,776. Farms numbering 3,617,440 report the manufacture of butter, and 15,670 report the manufacture of cheese.

The farms reporting butter manufactured 1,071,745,127 pounds, of which 518,139,026 pounds were sold, for which the farmers received $86,606,446. Farms reporting cheese manufactured 16,372,330 pounds, of which 14,692,542 pounds were sold, for which the farmers received $1,342,444.

New York reports the largest number of dairy cows, 1,501,608; the largest value of dairy products, $55,474,155, and the largest number of gallons of milk produced, milk sold, cream sold, and butter, as well as cheese, made. Pennsylvania comes second in the value of dairy products.

This is certainly an interesting exhibit, and calls attention to the vast importance of the industry that this bill is designed to protect from imposition and unfair competition.

New Hampshire has strict laws relating to adulterated butter, oleomargarine, and imitation cheese. The coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter is prohibited precisely as this bill provides, but notwithstanding the laws of the State the people of New Hampshire are substantially a unit in favor of the legislation embodied in this bill. The recent census shows that there are 115,036 dairy cows in the State, which is a gain of 22 per cent since 1850, and a gain of 6 per cent in the last decade. New Hampshire has, in proportion to her population, almost 50 per cent more dairy cows than the State of New York.

Mr. President, the Patrons of Husbandry in this country number 500,000, and they are entitled to be heard on a subject that vitally concerns their welfare. They are banded together for mutual instruction and help. Naturally they are jealous of their rights, and are properly alarmed over the dangers that threaten a leading industry in which they are engaged, because of competition with an inferior and cheaper article colored in imitation of genuine butter. They have voiced their opposition before committees of Congress and in the agricultural press of the country, and they are now looking to the Senate to do them justice. Their contention was never better stated than by Hon. Aaron Jones, master of the National Grange, when he said to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives:

The time has come when the American people want to get back to the good old system of doing business that is square and honest between man and man. So, whatever we undertake, we insist that the man who sells us the article must make his representations true and right. This is the principle upon which this Republic has prospered in the past; it is the principle upon which it will prosper and must prosper in the future.

THE GRANGE SUPPORTS THE BILL.

Mr. President, in behalf of the State Grange and 258 subordinate granges in New Hampshire, composed of intelligent, industrious, and thrifty men and women, as well as in behalf of the State Dairy-men's Association and the State Board of Agriculture—in behalf of manufacturer, laborer, and farmer alike—I support this bill, believing that it embodies the cardinal principles of common honesty and represents the moral convictions of an enlightened and progressive people. It proposes to legislate against a palpable and brazen fraud, to the end that the honest farmer and dairyman may have protection from the wicked ingenuity and dishonest devices of a class of men whose highest ambition seems to be to rob the unsuspecting, and gain profit by unscrupulous and unworthy transactions.

A DANGEROUS SUBSTITUTE.

The minority of the committee propose a substitute which gives colored oleomargarine the protection of the interstate-commerce laws to come into a State and be sold in 1 and 2 pound packages in absolute violation of the laws and will of the States. It furnishes no protection whatever to the guest at the hotel, restaurant, or boarding house, and also protects the retailer in the possession of an article which he can upon convenient occasion palm off as butter to unwary customers whom he knows not to be detectives or officers. Instead of settling this question once and for all, as Congress should at this session, and thus quiet the conflict that has been raging for years throughout the country, the passage of the substitute would simply place upon the shelves of the grocers, beyond the reach of State laws, counterfeit butter, and reveal Congress in the light of protecting makers and sellers of oleomargarine instead of affording relief to the millions of producers of butter. Instead of settling the question, it would simply aggravate the situation; it would be giving a stone where bread is asked. Surely the Senate will not lend itself to such a dangerous and dishonest proposition.

A GOOD BILL.

The bill under consideration threatens no harm to the oleomargarine industry if honestly conducted, but it does lay the strong hand of the law on the business if carried on along the lines of deceit, misrepresentation, and false pretense. It does not propose to restrict or prevent the sale of oleomargarine as such. On the contrary, it reduces the tax on the product from 2 cents to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when it is sold in its natural color and not in imitation of dairy butter.

Mr. President, I can conceive of no higher function of government than to protect and shield those of its citizens who are engaged in legitimate enterprises from the insidious and destructive attacks of men who place personal gain above truth, honor, and integrity. Thus believing, I shall unreservedly and gladly give my vote in favor of this wise and beneficent measure.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is my desire to address the Senate as briefly as I may upon this bill. The speeches which have been made in advocacy of it have been exceptionally strong, and I think it is only a fair concession to the Senators who have spoken against it to say that they have left little, if anything, to be said in opposition to it. As I have listened to the arguments in opposition, for they have been arguments, I have been reminded of the debate upon the bill now and since 1886 a law upon the statute book. My friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and many other Senators who are here now and were here then will remember it.

Its constitutionality was attacked upon the same ground precisely as is the constitutionality of the pending bill, and it was hysterically urged that it was a tax intended to destroy one industry for the benefit of another; that it was, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] who from his standpoint made a very strong speech, called it, class legislation. The manufacturers have not challenged in the courts successfully the constitutionality of the existing law, levying upon this product an excise tax of 2 cents a pound, with provisions regulatory and punitive in their character; and I think everyone will admit that the operation of the law, from the oleomargarine standpoint, has been largely beneficial to the manufacturers of that article.

In the debates of that day it was made very apparent that in some portions of the country this product as manufactured was extremely deleterious. The evidence in support of that was quite overwhelming. The number of manufacturing establishments, under the operation of Government regulation provided by the existing law, has diminished, but the output of oleomargarine and butterine has very greatly increased. So while at that day it was a product entitled to be regarded with suspicion, so far as its healthfulness was concerned, to-day it seems to be generally admitted that it is a healthful product. I do not say as healthful as good butter, but a relatively healthful product and therefore a legitimate article of commerce.

I believe, notwithstanding the vehement attack upon this bill, that, if enacted into law and if under its provisions oleomargarine and butterine shall be brought into the open, to be sold for what they are instead of for something which they are not, their production in legitimate competition and under the flag of fair play will not be diminished, but will increase.

I say now that if this were a proposition to tax a legitimate article of commerce for purposes of repression, in order to eliminate fair competition with another legitimate article of commerce, I should not vote for it; but to my apprehension it is not that at all.

My friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] made an argument against this measure from a constitutional standpoint, and he always speaks intelligently and ably upon any subject with which he is concerned. But it is a long way from impeaching the constitutionality of this bill to cite the Topeka case and Mr. Justice Miller's opinion in it. That case was without question correctly decided, and it enunciated a principle which no lawyer at this day will attempt to controvert, but it is far away from any principle involved in this bill.

In that case the municipality under legislative authority issued bonds to be paid, principal and interest, by moneys raised from taxation upon all the taxable property in the municipality. For what? To be turned over to private individuals who were engaged in the construction of iron works in that city, confessedly not from the standpoint of the law a public purpose. No lawyer will pretend that it stood upon the basis of a railroad, because the railroad company is permitted to exercise, the use being a public use, the ultimate power which the State has over the property of the citizen—the power of eminent domain, to take it whether you will or not, at a price to be agreed upon if possible; if not, to be fixed by others.

No iron company, no manufacturing company, could be given the power to condemn land, to take private property for its use, because under all the decisions that is a private and not a public use. And so Mr. Justice Miller held—and he was one of the greatest judges who ever sat upon any bench, in my judgment—that the act was unconstitutional for the reason that it was an attempt, through the power of taxation, to take money from the owners of taxable property in that municipality and transfer it to individuals for a purely private purpose. That is not this case.

Nor does the oft-quoted sentence—and it is dangerous to quote sentences from opinions—from Judge Cooley have the slightest reference to any principle involved in this proposed legislation. He defines a tax to be what we all know it to be, and he says a tax not for a public purpose is tyrannical. That is true. But that, when you come to the application of it, does not tend even to show that the tax proposed here is not for a public purpose.

There have been and are two schools of constitutional construction in this country. It is unnecessary to subdivide them. There is the one school—and I do not refer to it without due deference—which has been for the strictest possible construction of the Constitution, moved thereto primarily by the desire to exaggerate the jurisdiction and power of the State as against the power of the Federal Government, so strict that it was necessary that it should eliminate some words from the taxing clause of the Constitution or, what is the same thing, give them no effect whatever. On the other hand, there is the other, which has taken a broader and, I think, a more correct view of the Constitution. Perhaps education and environment have something to do with my view upon that question just as education and environment have had something to do with the narrower view upon it.

The language of the Constitution to me has always seemed quite plain. Section 8 provides:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

I shall not contend, although a Republican and bred in what is called the liberal school, that the general-welfare clause is a substantive power without limit. It is not necessary to sustain this bill that one should so contend. I am willing, and have been accustomed, to adopt the theory of Judge Story about it. He inserted the words "in order," so that it would read:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, etc.

From the foundation of the Government the broad construction has been put legislatively, and I think legally, upon the taxing clause of the Constitution. On the one theory a protective tariff is unconstitutional, the Congress being authorized only to tax for revenue purposes and nothing more, primarily. With these constructionists whatever protection comes from such taxation must be purely incidental. From the beginning of the Government, as stated by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the other day, Congress has, in the exercise of this power conferred by section 8, levied protective duties, discriminating duties, and the power to collect from duties and imposts is precisely the same power and subject to the same restriction as the power to collect from excises. I think almost the first bill passed by the Congress, approved by George Washington, was a protective tariff bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The first one.

Mr. SPOONER. The very first one; approved, I think, on the 4th of July, contemporaneous almost with the adoption of the Constitution. It levied duties, and its known purpose in levying those duties and its declared purpose was inconsistent with the narrower construction which has later by strict constructionists been placed upon that clause. So from that day to this we have in the exercise of this power, so far as it relates to duties and imposts, exercised it with reference to subserving the interest of our people as it might seem best to Congress, sometimes with little regard to the income or revenue which it would bring into the Treasury.

It will not do to say at this late day, either from the standpoint of legislation or from the standpoint of the decisions, that it is not constitutional for Congress to levy duties except for revenue only. Congress once—and that question was involved in the license-tax cases—levied an excise, a special tax, upon the sale of lottery tickets and upon the sale of liquor, one at least being prohibited by the laws of the State of New York and the laws of many other of the States. We have in our law to-day, and we have had for many years a tax of $10 a pound on opium manufactured for smoking purposes in the United States.

Does anyone pretend that that tax was imposed for revenue purposes? Of course if any were manufactured and it was discovered, it would bring into the Treasury revenue; but that was not the primary object of the tax. It was to make, by reason of the tax, opium for smoking purposes a luxury too expensive to be indulged in by our people. It was a repressive tax and was levied not so much with reference to revenue as it was levied with reference to the general welfare of the people of the United States. It was imposed because it is known to be a drug fascinating in the extreme, quickly entralling those who use it, sure as death to wreck the body and the brain of man or woman, and because of that and to guard our people against its baleful influence, as far as law can guard a people against a habit, and thereby to promote the general welfare of the United States that tax was levied.

All through our tariff laws we find duties levied upon champagne and other wines not containing more than a certain percentage of alcohol. The same thing is true as to brandy. A much higher rate is imposed if the quantity of alcohol exceeds the statutory limit. We find in our tariff laws provisions against imitations, whether composed of the thing upon which the tax in the genuine article is levied or not, with a high rate of taxation. That has been so from the beginning, and whatever party has control of the Government it will be so to the end. That is not for the purpose of obtaining revenue from the imitation, but it is for the purpose of securing the collection of the tax imposed upon the genuine article.

Take the tax upon the circulation of State-bank notes. Does anyone pretend that that tax was levied for revenue purposes? It has been conceded by the Supreme Court of the United States in more than one decision that that was not its object. It was a tax intended to destroy the circulation of State-bank currency. I will not spend much time on this matter.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I do not think he need spend any. Nobody disputes that proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. What proposition?

Mr. MONEY. The one that the Government had a right to tax out of existence State-bank currency. I do not think there is a man in the Chamber who disputes that proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator puts it on the ground that it was in aid of the power conferred by Congress to furnish a currency for the country.

Mr. MONEY. I said the Government had a right to make use of any instrument it thought necessary to take care of itself. In war money is a most necessary and primary thing, but I do not think any Senator will dispute the right of the Government to tax State-bank currency in competition with national-bank currency.

Mr. SPOONER. It was not done in the exercise of a war power at all. Under its power to regulate the currency Congress has clear authority to prohibit the issue of State-bank circulation. Congress could have directly done, under the power conferred specifically relating to that subject, what it did by taxation indirectly. But not because it was required in aid of another power, but because under the plain language of section 8 it had the power to do it, Congress saw fit to resort to the taxing power and exercised the taxing power in order to deprive the States of a function which, from the foundation of the Government, they had been in undisputed exercise of, not for revenue, although some revenue might be derived from it, and the construction by Chief Justice Chase in that case of this section 8 and the unlimited character almost of the taxing power is as broad as any man ever could suggest.

Now, Mr. President, what is this tax? In the first place, it is a reduction of the tax on oleomargarine. The tax under the existing law is 2 cents a pound. We have been reducing taxes, perhaps too rapidly. That I do not know. That I think nobody can know to-day. But dealing with oleomargarine, as Congress has dealt with other subjects of taxation, it is proposed here to reduce the tax on oleomargarine from 2 cents a pound to one-quarter of 1 cent per pound.

Does anyone contend that the Congress may not levy a tax constitutionally upon oleomargarine? I know of no limit myself to the taxing power under section 8, outside of the specific limitations which we find in the Constitution, so far as concerns objects of taxation, except that we must not exercise the power of taxation to weaken in any way the administration of the States or the instrumentalities employed by the States in government.

I have heard no one contend that Congress may not properly, if it so chooses, levy a tax upon this product. The present tax has brought revenue, I think, altogether perhaps $11,000,000—it may be more. This tax of one-quarter of 1 cent a pound will bring revenue. The object of the tax is revenue. No one will pretend that the bill could originate under the Constitution in this Chamber. It is not a tax like the tax involved in the head-money cases, which the court sustained as a regulation of commerce and declared was not imposed in the exercise of the taxing power conferred by section 8. This tax is imposed under the taxing power contained in section 8. There might be other objects upon which the tax should be levied.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin, then, to concede that he does not defend this bill as an attempt to exercise the authority of Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution?

Mr. SPOONER. No—

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator may defend that position, but he differs with all who have spoken on the other side.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not proceeding on that line at this time. I am claiming that Congress has under the Constitution the power to levy this tax on oleomargarine as it has the power, I suppose, to levy a tax on butter; as it has the power to levy a tax on cotton-seed oil and any other of the objects of commerce which may be taxed by Congress. The limit is hard to find. But in selecting objects of taxation we are not limited at all to objects which will produce the largest amount of revenue. In selecting objects of taxation we have a right to keep in mind, as every Congress has kept in mind, the general welfare of the people of the United States. The object of taxation is revenue. The motive with which, for one, I vote to select this particular article for taxation is the interest, as I understand it, of the people.

But this bill provides that if oleomargarine (and I do not use the language of the bill) is colored in imitation of butter the tax upon it shall be 10 cents a pound. That brings to my mind no difficulty whatever. To me that is a regulatory tax legitimately imposed in aid of the collection of the tax levied upon the genuine article, as is done in many, many instances, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] knows better than I do, for he knows everything about tariff laws and our financial or fiscal legislation. There is no tax on butter, and if this article is so made as not to be easily distinguishable from butter it might evade the tax imposed upon oleomargarine. When an article taxed is made to counterfeit an article not subject to tax it may have upon it and ought to have upon it, a higher tax—in order to secure identification of the genuine article as against the fraud or counterfeit which, if successful, evades the tax intended to be imposed by Congress upon the genuine article. It is on precisely the same principle that Congress has the power to put a higher duty upon counterfeit brandy which, if successful, might evade the tax on genuine brandy than it puts upon the genuine brandy.

We have provided in our laws a tax upon cigarettes made of tobacco, and we have provided the same tax upon cigarettes made of a substitute for tobacco, although nothing in that substitute might be subject to a tax at all. We tax it because it is a counterfeit, and because if it were not taxed it would tend to defeat the Government in collecting the tax imposed and intended to be imposed upon the tobacco cigarette.

And so all producers of wine know that wine with a certain percentage of alcohol, champagne or still wine, is taxed at a certain rate, but if at their peril they, as an imposition upon our laws, include more, however little, than the statutory limit of spirits, a very much higher tax is imposed upon it. The degree of the regulatory tax upon the counterfeit or imitation is for Congress, having regard for the welfare of the people, to determine. The difference in tax upon the article intended to be taxed and the same article made to counterfeit an article not taxed finds justification in principle and abundant illustrations in our laws.

Another thing, Mr. President. This bill imposes license fees upon manufacturers and retail dealers. In aid of the collection of those fees or taxes Congress has the power, and may properly exercise it, to impose this added tax upon the counterfeit, because everyone knows that if no oleomargarine goes from the hands of the manufacturer into the hands of the retail dealer except that which speaks for itself, it will be easy, comparatively, to identify the person, manufacturer or retailer, who sells without the license, whereas if it is colored and made in the similitude of butter, so that one can not without the most careful and sometimes a scientific test distinguish between the two, it goes without saying that it would be easy for both the manufacturer and the retail dealer to escape the license fees or taxes.

If a man sells it for what it is, the Government officials know that they are justified in exacting from him the license fee imposed by law. If he sells it for butter, so that you can not tell the difference between butter and this counterfeit of butter, the difficulty of identification for purposes of taxation is infinitely increased.

Now, Mr. President, a business which confesses that in the present condition of the public taste and the public prejudice it can only exist by a method which cheats the ultimate purchaser into the belief that he is buying butter instead of oleomargarine—

Mr. MONEY. That will not do.

Mr. SPOONER. What will not do?

Mr. MONEY. That statement.

Mr. SPOONER. Why will it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. I beg pardon. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator, and only shook my head by way of dissent. I do not think the oleomargarine manufacturer has colored oleomargarine with the intention of making the retail purchaser believe it was butter, but only that he might cater to the well-known public taste, just exactly as the manufacturer of butter uses the same substance to color the butter he makes. The Senator will excuse me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I did not intend to interrupt him.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not expect my friend to agree with me at all about anything this afternoon.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, yes; I did agree with you a while ago when you stated the law, but when you come to a statement of fact I do not.

Mr. SPOONER. We are told by Senators, including my friend from Mississippi, that if the oleomargarine manufacturers are not permitted to continue to sell oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter, they will be driven out of business.

Mr. MONEY. Now, will you allow me to correct that statement?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Of course the Senator is ingenuous and does not intend to misstate anything.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly I do not.

Mr. MONEY. I did not intend to be understood that way. What I distinctly said was that both articles were colored, one just as well as the other, not that one might imitate the other, but to cater to the well-known public taste.

Mr. SPOONER. That is different?

Mr. MONEY. I said that if the butter men would make their butter white, I thought it was quite likely that for the same reason which actuated them the butterine men would make their product white, not to imitate butter, but to meet the public taste. I did not admit at any time that it was the intention to defraud the ultimate purchaser or to deceive anybody.

I will say, also, that I am honestly of the opinion that the bill I have presented here as a substitute, representing the minority of the committee, will go further to prevent any sort of deception or imposition than the one brought in by the majority of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. What effect does the Senator think it will have on the oleomargarine business if they manufacture oleomargarine and put it upon the market solely in its natural color?

Mr. MONEY. I think, with the permission of the butter men to color their butter and thereby maintain the public taste that way, the effect would be very disastrous upon the manufacturers of oleomargarine. In other words, it would carry out the purpose of the men who are behind the bill. It would eliminate their industry, the product of butterine, from the market. That is the object they have declared from time to time, as I said the other day. I am very candid about that. I think it would destroy it. I think it would perhaps hurt the butter men if we would prevent them from coloring the article in order to deceive anybody, and I will refer to the well-known fact that every creamery in the United States uses the very same coloring matter that is used by the butterine people, and it is done for the same reason.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator does not really dispute what I said. What I was saying was that if the oleomargarine—

Mr. MONEY. I only corrected a statement; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. What I was saying was that it is claimed that if the oleomargarine people are not permitted to manufacture and color their oleomargarine in the similitude of butter, but are required to manufacture it and put it upon the market in its natural color, that will destroy the business. Does the Senator dispute that?

Mr. MONEY. That was not the way I put it.

Mr. SPOONER. But it is the way I put it. Does the Senator dispute that?

Mr. MONEY. Yes; I dispute a part of it.

Mr. SPOONER. In what respect?

Mr. MONEY. The part in which I said a while ago that it is not done in imitation of butter.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; you said colored in imitation of butter. You laid stress on it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will say colored so that it imitates butter.

Mr. MONEY. But it does not imitate butter.

Mr. SPOONER. Colored so that it looks like butter.

Mr. MONEY. No; it does not look like butter. It does not look like butter now. If you take oleomargarine and then take plain butter, they do not look alike, because the butter is not the color when it comes from the churn that it is when it is presented to the buyer in the market.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, that is the old question—

Mr. MONEY. It is the solemn truth, nevertheless.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. MONEY. All the facts prove it.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the old question of color. The most impudent proposition I ever listened to in my life is the attempt by the manufacturers of hog and steer butter to claim the butter color to be their own.

Mr. MONEY. They invented it.

Mr. SPOONER. Invented the color?

Mr. MONEY. They discovered it, I mean. I did not mean that they invented it.

Mr. SPOONER. They discovered the color? Did they discover the color of June butter? If so, when?

Mr. MONEY. I am not speaking of June butter. I am speaking now of the article which is actually used by butterine, oleomargarine, and butter manufacturers in coloring their several products. It is all the same, and it was discovered first by the chemist who used it in the making of oleomargarine. It was adopted by the butter people, however. There is no objection to it when sold. It is perfectly innocent as far as I know. I have heard chemists say so, at least.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a natural color of butter, is there not?

Mr. MONEY. There are many colors of butter.

Mr. SPOONER. There is a natural color of June butter?

Mr. MONEY. No; there is no natural color of winter butter or August butter or January butter. Butter is butter.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, Mr. President, that is it: Butter is butter.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; and it is not June butter, either.

Mr. SPOONER. And colored oleomargarine is a fraud upon butter. You may color butter as you please; it is still butter. You may color oleomargarine as you please, and it is still not butter. To say, Mr. President, that the manufacturers of oleomargarine discovered the butter color, that it is their trade-mark, and they have a right to use it in coloring their product to look like butter—

Mr. MONEY. No.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; they do—to look like butter, is a piece of unparalleled impudence upon the part of those manufacturers. I am getting along in years; I am pretty near 60. I never lived on a farm; but I remember in my boyhood many, many times being a guest on a farm and seeing the farm wife make butter, yellow butter, June butter, and she attended to it with just as much care as she would her baby, and when it was finished with all the skill and art which she could command, ready for the market, pure, clean, sweet, yellow butter—proud of it as a queen would be of her crown. There was no oleomargarine then.

What do you say to this circular and the color card of Mr. Moxley, which was read by my colleague [Mr. QUARLES] the other day, which he sent out—a color card with different colors of butter marked upon it, calling attention to the different colors. I think one was white, was it not?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. And instructing his customers to ascertain the color which was "suitable to your trade" in that community, and he would send butterine of the required color.

Mr. MONEY. As the Senator's remarks appear to be directed to me, am I to regard that as a question?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator may take it as a question.

Mr. MONEY. Then, I am willing to answer it, but I do not know anything about the fact which the Senator now states, except what was said the other day. I presume it to be correct, and I presume that the manufacturers of coloring matter for oleomargarine were trying to please the taste of their customers, and that there must be a different color for oleomargarine of different grades, as there is for butter of different grades.

I wish to say right here and now that these oleomargarine people have to suit the tastes of their customers, and, as I said the other day in my remarks in the Senate, they color oleomargarine crimson in the West Indies because the colored people there want that color.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose all the butter makers in the United States by concert should arrange that on the first day of the second month from now butter should all be colored white, would not oleomargarine on that day be colored white?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know that it would.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that it would.

Mr. MONEY. But the public would first have to have shown a disposition to take white butter.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator told me the other day, in answer to a question of mine, while he was speaking, that if butter were colored white, oleomargarine would be colored white.

Mr. MONEY. I said I thought so, but I did not know.

Mr. SPOONER. I think I know that it would.

Mr. President, it is so plain, taking the history of this product, that it is colored with sole reference to enable the manufacturers and retail dealers to sell it for butter that I am amazed that any man, here or elsewhere, can be found to question it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, as I read this bill the tax is 10 cents a pound upon oleomargarine containing any coloring, a yellow color or a tint of it corresponding to the ordinary butter color. If the tax is paid the article may be disposed of without restriction.

Mr. SPOONER. That is without restriction so far as the United States is concerned.

Mr. RAWLINS. Without restriction so far as the United States is concerned. Then the deception could be continued, I understand. Will not the effect of this bill be to lend encouragement to the manufacturer to produce an inferior and more deleterious and cheaper product than oleomargarine in order that he may save himself the amount which he is compelled to contribute to the Government and thus impose to a greater extent upon consumers? Would not the effect of this legislation be that, instead of preventing deception, it would aggravate it?

Mr. SPOONER. I think not.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me suggest to him that adding the 10 cents a pound tax by no means relieves this commodity from the other restrictions which the law puts upon it, requiring it to be sold under its true name, in the original package, and everything of that kind.

Mr. RAWLINS. If I may be permitted in that connection, these restrictions which are to suppress fraud are ineffective, as I understand, and this bill is not ostensibly to suppress fraud, but to raise revenue. If it is a revenue measure, that feature is dependent for success upon the extent of the consumption and sale of the article, which can only be sold at a profit or without loss after the imposition of the tax by the degradation of its quality, thus imposing a detrimental article upon the public for consumption. It seems to me, while I was inclined to entirely favor the objects of this bill, that it fails to accomplish the purpose which seems to be in the minds of many who advocate its passage.

Mr. SPOONER. It is impossible to say to what extent in the way of fraud these people will go. So far as the past is any foundation for prophecy, they will certainly go to any extent which they regard as safe and profitable.

The Senator's proposition is practically this, that if we impose upon oleomargarine and butterine colored as butter this tax of 10 cents a pound, which about equalizes the difference in cost between oleomargarine at perhaps a fair profit and butter at its average price from year to year, to prevent a continuance of the vending of this counterfeit or the perpetration of this fraud, they will, inspired by avarice, perpetrate a worse fraud; not only a fraud so far as the counterfeit is concerned, but a fraud upon the health of the people of the United States; that they will, instead of selling, as now, a healthful article colored as butter, sell an unhealthful article, a deleterious article, to the people of the country. If that should turn out to be the fact, Mr. President—which I think it will not, for I think this bill as it is drawn, and as the Senate will doubtless amend it, will compel oleomargarine to seek an open market for what it is—if the avarice of these people, if their continued defiance of law leads them to deteriorate oleomargarine so as to make it unhealthful, so far as the commerce between the States is concerned, future Congresses will find a remedy for that much more stringent than this.

This bill brings the legislation of Congress into harmony with the legislation of 32 of the States of this Union, containing, I believe, over 57,000,000 of the people of this country. It is perfectly idle to say that oleomargarine and butterine are not manufactured and put upon the market to be sold as butter. The evidence to the contrary from a dozen different States, from men who have had official opportunity to know the truth, is the other way—overwhelmingly the other way—and the very fact that these people are here fighting with all their power and with all the lobby that they can command a proposed law which simply asks of them to sell their product for what it is so it can deceive no one is of itself almost irrefutable evidence that counterfeit and fraud is essential to their success as their business is now conducted.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would be kind enough to take this bill and show me how it is to cure the evil which he has just now been discussing—how it is to prevent the fraud which he says exists, and which I do not dispute.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think these people would not rather sell this "nutritious and healthful article" for what it is at a quarter of a cent a pound than to sell it for what it is not subject to the penalties of the law at a tax of 10 cents a pound? Avarice thus far has driven them not only to the danger line, but away beyond it. The strongest appeal ordinarily you can make to such people is to their pockets. And, Mr. President, if the difference between one-quarter of a cent a pound between the article in its natural color or colored so as not to resemble butter or imitate butter and the 10 cents a pound imposed upon the article colored in imitation of butter is not sufficient to deter them in the future, then Congress will have to find another remedy.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he is of the opinion now that this tax of 10 cents will compel these people to produce white oleomargarine? Does the Senator believe they will cease to color oleomargarine?

Mr. SPOONER. I think they will cease to color it. That is what I think. I think if it would not make any difference with them they would not be here fighting this bill so strenuously and proclaiming everywhere that if this bill is passed their business will be killed, and I think Senators would not stand here constantly iterating and reiterating the statement that this is a tax to destroy one industry in order to build up another. Of course no one can tell precisely what will be the effect of legislation. I hope and believe that if this bill shall be enacted, the difference between the quarter of a cent a pound and 10 cents a pound will lead these gentlemen to manufacture and put on the market their product for what it really is.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand the laws of these 32 States. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] spoke of these laws yesterday, as I understood him—and he will correct me if I am wrong—as having been passed at a time when there was prejudice against oleomargarine and doubt as to the healthfulness of the product.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say that as to all of them.

Mr. SPOONER. No, but very many of them.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is my understanding.

Mr. SPOONER. Most of these laws, Mr. President, were passed some years after the passage of the oleomargarine act now upon the statute book, which was passed in 1886. Most of those laws permit the sale of oleomargarine, I think every one of them, with perhaps a single exception, permits the sale of oleomargarine for what it is, identified by brand or other notification. So that it can not be contended successfully that those laws were passed because of hostility to the product and the unwillingness upon the part of those States that it should be sold and used. Some of those laws were passed in 1891, some in 1895, some in 1897, and some in 1898. They are all laws prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine colored to resemble butter.

Were the legislatures of 32 of these States—some of the greatest States in this Union—acting upon misrepresentation? Did they act without knowledge? Was there no evil, Mr. President, which these legislatures sought to remedy? Will any man so far impeach the intelligence and the integrity of the legislatures of 32 sovereign States of this Union, which have passed these laws to prevent a cheat, as to say that they did not know what they were doing; that they took a leap in the dark; that they sought a remedy against a wrong which did not exist?

I put the voice of these States, as uttered through their legislatures, against the opinion of my learned friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. If there ever could be afforded stronger evidence of fraud upon the people of the States by the sale of a product for butter which was not butter, and of a public necessity that the people be protected against it, than this legislation, I should like to have some Senator indicate it in our history. I know of none. The Federal law now upon the statute book facilitated and facilitates this fraud. It does not make the coloring of oleomargarine in the similitude of butter unlawful. It imposes a small tax upon it—2 cents a pound. But, Mr. President, it is the assertion of the Federal jurisdiction, and it may be carried from every State into every other State as interstate commerce and sold there in the unbroken package, because the Congress did not enact as to oleomargarine, and has not done so—it is proposed to do it by this bill—a provision similar to the Wilson act, which applied only to liquor; and so, under the operation of this law, manufacturers of oleomargarine would manufacture it colored to suit the taste of the vicinity—colored in the similitude of butter.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if it is his judgment that when the question is fairly presented in the Supreme Court of the United States that court will hold that Congress can abdicate its power to regulate commerce among the several States as to a perfectly wholesome article of food or clothing?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, I had doubt about the correctness of the intimation in the case of Leisy v. Hardin, which led to the Wilson bill. It looked to me at the time that the passage of the Wilson bill was rather an abdication upon the part of Congress of a power committed to Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will excuse me, I had not thought of drawing him into a criticism of a case that has been decided.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not object to that.

Mr. BAILEY. That was not my purpose, but I take it that there is a distinction between a question like liquor, that concerns the morals of the people and therefore falls within the clear definition of the police power, and another article, which concerns neither morals nor health; and my judgment is that the court, which divided in the original-package decision, will never hold that Congress can abdicate to the States of this Union its power over perfectly wholesome articles of food.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have no idea that the court will ever hold that a fraud has no relation to morals. The court held in the Plumley case that the State had a right to protect its people against fraud and imposition, and it reiterated that decision in the Schollenberger case.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to appear persistent, but that is not my question. I concede that. I myself contend that it needs no Congressional action to enable the States to suppress a deceit and deceitful practices in the sale of a food product. That was the plain decision in the Plumley case. But, leaving the question of deceitfulness out and coming plainly and flatly to the proposition that Congress shall attempt to abdicate its power to regulate commerce among the several States as to an article of food that involves neither the question of morals nor health, does the Senator from Wisconsin believe that the Supreme Court would ever sustain such a law?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Senator leaves out the only question there was in it.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, the question as to whether this is fraud or not, of course, is a question of fact—

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no; but in the Schollenberger case there was a statute which prohibited the sale of oleomargarine, healthful or unhealthful, colored or in its natural state—

Mr. BAILEY. And they held that law invalid—

Mr. SPOONER. And they held that law invalid.

Mr. BAILEY. Because they held that under the facts in that case oleomargarine was a healthful food product and a legitimate article of commerce.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, the question is, if Congress were to take the Schollenberger case and attempt to cover it, have we the power to do it?

Mr. SPOONER. I think so.

Mr. BAILEY. I think not.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, that makes me afraid I am wrong, but I think so. In saying that I have the utmost respect for my friend's ability and admiration for his lawyer-like method.

To me the Schollenberger case involved a pretty plain proposition. It could not, of course, be left to a State to decide what should be an article of interstate commerce. If that were left to the States, Mr. President, the whole power of Congress over interstate commerce might be emasculated, and the country might be relegated to that condition which preceded the adoption of the Constitution, and out of which grew in large part the necessity for the Constitution. The court held that oleomargarine was a legitimate product; the court did not hold that oleomargarine colored so as to imitate butter might not be excluded by a State. The court did not overrule either in language or by implication, as I understand it, the Plumley case.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will excuse me, they expressly affirmed it.

Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I am going to take my question away from oleomargarine, because I really desire an expression of the Senator's opinion. Let us broaden it until, we will say, Congress should pass a law declaring that every article, when passing from one State into another, should immediately, upon the arrival of that article, or of all articles, into the State, become subject to its laws, does the Senator from Wisconsin believe that such a law would be constitutional?

Mr. SPOONER. Subject to the police laws of the State?

Mr. BAILEY. Subject to all laws.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, it is an impossible question. Congress would never think of passing any such law.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope not. But it is a question of power, not of inclination.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not see what relation it has to the question which I am endeavoring to discuss.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I will say that I had not myself intended to debate this question, and I have not entirely changed my purpose; but the Senator's discussion rather tempts me to change it. I wanted, however, to avoid that, if possible, so that if we could agree as to the matter of law—and I have agreed with the Senator on almost every proposition of law he has submitted, and my only difference with him is when he comes to apply the law to the facts of the case—I wanted to eliminate the facts, and thus eliminate what I believe is the only difference between us.

Now, if the Senator from Wisconsin believes that Congress possesses the power to abdicate to the States of this Union its control over interstate and foreign commerce, then we differ, and very widely, as a matter of law, and we would present the remarkable anomaly of a Democrat and a strict constructionist standing for Federal power against the State, while a Republican and a liberal constructionist would be standing for State power against the Federal Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator and I differ on that proposition, as he states it, there would be only two of us, and one of us would be sane and he would be the man, and the other would be insane, and I would be the other man. [Laughter.] That is all there is of that. I could not contend for any such proposition as that Congress has the power to disable itself by surrender of the functions committed to it by the Constitution—not at all. Nor do I see that that is involved in this question. All that I have occasion to claim is this: That the Congress has the power as to oleomargarine colored in the similitude of butter, imitation butter, to adopt the same provisions that it has adopted as to liquor, only upon the theory that it is counterfeit and an imposition. Beyond that I could not be induced to go, nor is it necessary that anyone shall go.

Now, Mr. President, when the Senator interrupted me I was calling attention to the laws of these States. Here are Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. All those States prohibit absolutely the sale of this article colored as butter. There is one odd law among them to which I will refer for only a moment, and that is the Missouri statute:

Imitation butter is defined as every article not produced wholly from pure milk or cream made in semblance of and designed to be used as a substitute for pure butter. It shall not be sold as butter; shall not be colored to resemble butter, unless it is to be sold outside the State.

They are almost all alike, with perhaps that exception. Now, what effect did these laws have in the 32 States? If anything ever showed the absolutely irresistible power of avarice, this situation did. The report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ending June 30, 1902, shows that in those 32 States, there were sold in that year in violation of these statutes 62,825,582 pounds of oleomargarine and butterine, colored in imitation of butter. A subtle and successful fraud! In the other States, where there was no law as to color, 16,860,142 pounds were sold. It is almost impossible to detect it. No law, however it may provide for brands and stamps, will be efficacious without the tax. Men who violate the statutes of a State, men who run the chances of the penalty on conviction, men who sell to the public oleomargarine for butter at the price of butter, will pay no attention to brands under the substitute bill any more than they do to brands under the existing law. A man who will omit to put a stamp on when the law requires it would not hesitate to rip the stamp which is put around the package.

I have no objection to men buying it who want it. I do not happen to want it. I do not want to put it on my table. I would be ashamed to give it to you for butter if you were my guest, and every man has a right to know when he pays for butter whether it is butter or whether it is oleomargarine, and there is no way under existing law by which that right can be secured to him. I repeat, it is a subtle fraud.

Senators know how almost impossible it is for the average man to detect the difference between the two, and I have evidence here, some of which I intended to call attention to, which I can not stop to refer to even, which is absolutely overwhelming in support of the proposition that it is sold as butter almost universally. It is sold in hotels, it is sold in restaurants, it is sold in boarding houses, it is sold everywhere—I believe, over 90 per cent of it, so far as retailers are concerned—as butter and at the price of butter.

Do Senators remember that seven of the States of this Union have in memorials to Congress confessed their inability to protect the people of those States against this fraud? The article is carried from one State to another or others. It is so insidious, so difficult of detection, and the profit in the fraud so great, the inducement so irresistible that the States have been utterly unable to protect the people against it. When a State, through its legislature, speaks it has my attention—any State. The State in which I have the honor to live memorialized Congress for the passage of the bill which was pending in the last Congress. Pennsylvania did, one of the empire States of this Union. Vermont did. Maryland did. Minnesota did. California did. Is this simply a demand by a "class" that a legitimate business be taxed out of existence in order that another legitimate business may have greater prosperity? Not at all.

They have had the same experience abroad on this subject that we have had in this country. Canada is beating us now in dairy products for export—butter and cheese. Canada has absolutely prohibited the manufacture of imitation cheese or butter. It has given a better reputation to her products and swollen vastly her exports.

July 10, 1899, the British Parliament passed a resolution creating a commission, and Hon. Henry Chaplin, president of the local board, appointed it. I will not stop to read the names. It was—

To be a committee to inquire into the use of preservatives and coloring matters in the preservation of food and to report:

(1) Whether the use of such materials or any of them for the preservation and coloring of food, in certain quantities, is injurious to health; and if so, in what proportions does their use become injurious.

(2) To what extents and in what amounts are they so used at the present time.

They were limited to the effect of adulteration upon health. They say in their report:

In the butter trade, and still more so in the cheese trade, artificial coloring has long been established. Highly colored goods find favor in some markets, uncolored or faintly colored goods in others. We have not found that in the interest of the consumer any interference is necessary with the customs of the trade in this respect.

That is, because of health.

In regard to margarine, we have to deal with a cheap and relatively inferior article invariably colored to resemble a more costly and superior article, and probably the only means of protecting the public from imposition would be to prohibit the introduction of any coloring matter into margarine which shall cause it to resemble butter.

This is the report, and Senators know how careful those commissions are in England:

Be the regulations as to the sale of margarine under declaration what they may, they can not protect the customer who calls for bread and butter at a hotel or restaurant from being served with bread and margarine, and paying for it at the rate charged for the superior article.

That is so in Chicago; it is so in Milwaukee; it is so in every city of the United States, and it is just as true in London and in Birmingham as it is in the cities of this country.

But as the margarine may be assumed to be a perfectly wholesome article of diet, it does not fall within the terms of our reference to make any recommendation upon a practice which is not attended with risk to the public health.

But they found it to be a fraud and an imposition, and they found that the only protection which could be afforded by law against the imposition was to prevent the coloration of margarine in similitude of butter.

On page 283, as to their investigation of the laws of Denmark, the report says:

Butter fat to the extent of 10 per cent only is allowed in margarine.

They limit the proportion, and that makes a great difference. It will not do to say that the ingredients in butter and the ingredients in margarine are the same. That means nothing. Everything depends upon the proportion.

Mr. MONEY. It is not contended that they are the same.

Mr. SPOONER. I have seen it stated that they were the same.

Mr. MONEY. I have never heard that.

Mr. SPOONER. Substantially the same.

The public can tell the difference between butter and margarine by the color laid down by law—

There they have a different system of government from ours, and they prescribe just what the color of margarine shall be so that anyone can tell by the color whether it is oleomargarine or butter, and thereby protect himself—and the margarine can be sold only when made up in special shape and labeled. Its sale as butter renders the vender liable to penalty.

On pages 78 and 79 appears the evidence of Mr. Alfred Hill, M. D., medical officer of health of the city of Birmingham, and also of the incorporated society of Medical Officers of Health. In speaking of his investigations of preservatives in oleomargarine and butter, on page 79, paragraph 2351, he says:

"With regard to the quantity of boric acid present, I have lumped together the samples of margarine and butter because the samples of margarine sold as margarine and bought as margarine were so few that it was hardly worth while separating them. Margarine is generally sold in the place of butter as a deception."

The laws of Italy also provide against this fraud, and the laws of France, where this thing was born, provide against this fraud.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. What provisions do some of those countries make to prevent it?

Mr. SPOONER. Denmark prescribes the color.

Mr. TELLER. That is what you have done in this bill?

Mr. SPOONER. It is not what is done in this bill.

Mr. TELLER. You allow it to be done.

Mr. SPOONER. What?

Mr. TELLER. You allow them to color it under this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. So that it shall not resemble butter. Denmark prescribes the color.

Mr. TELLER. There is nothing in this bill which prevents them from coloring oleomargarine like butter. On the contrary, you give them that permission if they are willing to pay 10 cents a pound for it.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well, of course that is true. We expect that the States, if the manufacturers are willing to pay that tax, will be able by this legislation—

Mr. TELLER. I should like to tell the Senator the difficulty I have about this bill. It seems to me that it supplies no way to decrease the fraud, but merely provides that when the fraud is perpetrated the party shall pay 10 cents a pound more.

Mr. SPOONER. They have to brand it as oleomargarine. They have the license fees to pay. They have the Government inspection that they had before and they have in addition the difference between one-quarter of a cent a pound and 10 cents a pound.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator's argument depends entirely upon the ground that it is to prevent fraud, and yet he has not told us, or at least I have not been able to understand, how this bill will prevent any fraud.

Mr. SPOONER. I can not tell the Senator whether this extra tax of 9½ cents will prevent fraud or not. I think it will. I hope it will.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe it will.

Mr. SPOONER. Let us try it.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if the promoters of this bill had been so anxious to prevent fraud as they profess to be, not wishing to impugn their motives, however, they could have got at it by saying that no oleomargarine should be colored at all; that it should all be white.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think an act of Congress providing that oleomargarine should not be colored at all would be valid?

Mr. TELLER. Possibly there might be some objection to it; but if you can put on 10 cents you can put on 50 cents, which would certainly shut them off.

Mr. SPOONER. That only shows that it is not the purpose here to tax it out of existence. Nobody here wants to destroy the industry.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but this discussion has gone on part of the time upon the theory that it would annihilate the business and part of the time upon the theory that it would make oleomargarine more respectable and better. I asked the Senator some time ago to detail if he could just what the purpose of this bill is, but I have not got very clearly through my mind what his purpose is.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I have been very unhappy and unfortunate in expression.

Mr. TELLER. Perhaps I have been dull.

Mr. SPOONER. No; that could hardly be possible. I have stated over and over again my own view—I am not expressing anyone else's—that the proposition of this bill, and that is the theory on which I support it, is not to destroy oleomargarine, not to drive it out of existence, but to reduce the tax upon it when manufactured in its natural color and not colored as butter, and to impose this additional tax of 9½ cents a pound upon it if colored as butter. I am not using the language of the bill. I suppose, as I have repeatedly stated, that the tax with the other provisions, the punitive provisions of the bill and the regulatory provisions of the bill, will lead the manufacturers of oleomargarine to put it upon the market for what it is. The Senator can not ask me to demonstrate that it will have that effect.

Mr. TELLER. No.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it will. He thinks it will not. If it does not, then we must seek some other remedy, because if 32 States of this Union are not able, with the help of the Federal Government, in the exercise of its constitutional taxing power, to keep this manufacture within lawful limits it is a bad case. I think it will be adequate.

Now, who is opposed to it? Some of the Senators from the Southern States oppose it because it will interfere with the market for cotton-seed oil. Are Senators really serious about that? One and three-quarters per cent, not more than 2 at the uttermost, of cotton-seed oil goes into oleomargarine, a mere bagatelle. There are a great many uses to which cotton-seed oil is put. There are several avenues of commerce in which it finds itself a factor.

Senators are asking too much for cotton-seed oil when on that ground they oppose this bill to prevent a fraud upon the people of the United States, and I have said thus far nothing about the fraud upon the dairymen, the people who make butter and sell it. I have confined myself solely to the fraud upon the consumer, and it is a fraud upon the rich as well as upon the poor, upon the young as well as upon the old. You may call it healthful; you may say it is not detrimental; I admit it as a general proposition, but to say that it is as nutritious, and to say that it is as digestible as butter, is not true, in my opinion.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if he heard the tables of analyses submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] this morning, made in different years by different chemists, that it is as digestible as butter? It is not the analysis of one man at one time that he quoted the other day, but that same man and others continued for years, and the general average was that it was as digestible as butter. That is scientific.

Mr. SPOONER. There is only one really accurate laboratory in which it can be determined whether a given thing is digestible for humanity or not, and that is the human stomach. You can not work out in a laboratory—

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Senator, if he will permit me still further to trespass, if he supposes that scientists and chemists go to work and talk about digestibility for anything but the human stomach?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MONEY. I do not think they do.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, they do.

Mr. MONEY. That is the question—whether it is digestible for the human stomach.

Mr. SPOONER. They make investigations to determine what classes of food are most digestible for cows and other animals.

Mr. MONEY. They were not talking about cows, because they do not feed cows on oleomargarine.

Mr. SPOONER. No; the cow has nothing whatever to do with oleomargarine. That is true.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that, but we are talking about the question of digestibility, and that means the human stomach and not the cow's.

Mr. SPOONER. That is why I say the chemists can not determine it.

Mr. MONEY. I do not know any other test.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; the way to determine it is to try it.

Mr. MONEY. They have tried it.

Mr. SPOONER. You might stand it, and others can not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators must address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, you might stand it, and other people might not.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. The Senator's good nature is so great that I rely confidently upon his permission to interrupt him. If the only test of the human stomach is as each one of us suffers the throes of indigestion from butter or oleomargarine, and if you can not tell one from the other you do not know what you have eaten, and when you get the colic it may be from genuine June butter or it may be a case of vitiated oleomargarine. The man can not tell. The Senator prefers the June butter with its June color, and some other people will prefer the oleomargarine with its June color, which would be white, I suppose.

Mr. SPOONER. What I meant was this: The average man who is active, who works in the open air, who exercises, probably finds it easily digestible. Such men can digest it, but even with them, I do not believe it is so digestible as butter, because there is very much more stearin in it than there is in butter. There is 12 per cent more. Dr. Wiley so testified; and it does not need a chemist to say that is not so easily digested—16 per cent as against 4 in butter. There is a vast number of people, and they are entitled to be considered, the sick, the enfeebled, those whose digestion is impaired for one reason or another, to be found unhappily almost in every man's home at one time or another, to whom he would be willing to give good butter, but to whom he would not be willing to give oleomargarine or butterine. They are a class that need protection more than the strong and the hardy.

This is a growing product. It will continue to grow. People will continue to use it. What is the harm in having it sold for what it is? What is the harm in protecting, as far as we constitutionally can, the people against this fraud? It is not a new question. The law passed sixteen years ago was passed for that purpose, and it is inefficacious. What is the harm as far as we can constitutionally do it, having that law already upon our statute books, in protecting every man and woman and child in the United States against this fraud and not against the genuine article if he wants to buy it? I mean protecting not simply his stomach, but protecting the pocket. Why fight against it?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator to allow me to go on. I have taken very much more time than I intended. I am anxious to be through.

Take cotton-seed oil. It is used in making caramels. It takes the place of cream. It 1889 one-third to one-half of all edible lard entering American commercial channels was made in part of cotton-seed oil. The season of 1889 turned out, this article says, 225,000,000 pounds of compound lard. By the use of it they have raised the lard of the hog, I am told, from 18 pounds to 35. You can not go to a retail store in the United States, so far as I have ever known, and buy a bottle of cotton-seed oil under that name. It is a wholesome product. It is not deleterious, so far as I know, in any respect. It goes abroad in vast quantities and comes back to us as olive oil, and we get an unlimited supply of fish, sardines and the like, too dead to swim in water any more, but live enough to swim in cotton-seed oil—embalmed in it.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator suppose that cotton-seed oil which goes to Europe and comes back labeled as olive oil comes back in the same condition in which it went to Europe?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, I do not know what they do to it over there.

Mr. BACON. The point of my inquiry is this: The Senator wanted to know if anyone had ever seen a bottle of cotton-seed oil sold as such. The oil which goes to Europe is crude cotton-seed oil, and it is there manipulated and refined and made to become very much like olive oil.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But there could be no possible reason or sense in exposing cotton-seed oil which is made in this country for sale in a bottle, because it would be unfit for use as such, it not having had the refining process which is necessary to make it palatable. Cotton-seed oil, to the extent of its production in this country, is sold under the denomination of cotton-seed oil. It is not sold in bottles, because it is not in a condition to be sold in bottles.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly not.

Mr. BACON. There is no factory or establishment in this country which undertakes that manipulation and refinement which are necessary to put it in a condition where it can be sold in bottles.

Mr. SPOONER. Well.

Mr. BACON. I only state this, Mr. President, because the Senator evidently by the inquiry assumed that the cotton-seed oil which comes back from Europe was the same cotton-seed oil which was sent there.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. It is very different.

Mr. SPOONER. What I meant was this: It goes over to Europe as cotton-seed oil and comes back as olive oil.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course it is refined.

Mr. BACON. But it is not in the same condition at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly not. I have cast no imputation on cotton-seed oil in any way. It is refined into olive oil.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, as he is making a special criticism on cotton-seed oil, it is a very great boon to such part of the human race as uses oil under whatever name, considering it to be olive oil, because before the use of cotton-seed oil for that purpose we did not get pure olive oil in this country, but we got vicious animal oils in place of the pure, nutritious, healthful vegetable oil which cotton-seed oil is.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes. Now, I have not said anything to the contrary of that statement. I say it is an excellent product, but I say it is sold as a fraudulent one at times. It enters into the manufacture of caramels, as I said. It is used as olive oil, as I said.

Mr. BACON. Then, Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. Wait a minute. It is used in preserving sardines and fish of that sort. People suppose it is olive oil. It is used in cottolene, a good product, but it is not the real thing. It is used in oleomargarine. For heaven's sake, how many different masquerades do you insist upon this gay deceiver being permitted to indulge in?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. I am not complaining—

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. According to the Senator's argument, for the protection of pure cotton-seed oil there ought to be a tax of about a dollar a bottle on all the oil that comes back here and masquerades as olive oil when, in fact, it is cotton-seed oil. The purpose of this bill, as suggested by the Senator to-day, and previously stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, is the novel proposition that this tax of 10 cents a pound is really for the purpose of protecting oleomargarine against the counterfeit article of oleomargarine, and not for the purpose of protecting pure butter. That is the proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say it was for the purpose of protecting oleomargarine against the counterfeit article. I said it was for the purpose of protecting the United States Government against a counterfeit article. Does not the Senator discover the difference?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. But I do not care to take time, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. BACON. The Senator may draw that distinction, but I understood the original proposition to be the other way, that it was for the purpose of protecting the genuine article of oleomargarine against what you denominate to be a fraud in the fact that it is but an imitation of butter.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, not at all. That was not my statement.

Now, Mr. President, there is another thing that surprises me. I am amazed that any Senator on the other side of the Chamber should oppose this bill for the reason that it would diminish the market for cotton-seed oil, because that is in a trust. It is in two trusts, one that has been in existence for a long time and which has a great number of mills, and another now being organized with a capital of $30,000,000. It is too bad to lose one chance "to clip the fangs of an octopus." That phrase has been used here many times. I have some letters here from Southern farmers, cotton producers, and dairymen also, intelligent letters from Georgia, Mississippi, and other States, in which they inveigh very bitterly against the strong and wicked grip in which, as to this product, they are held in those States.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. I always permit everybody, and that is what keeps me so long. Go ahead.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; go on.

Mr. MONEY. I just want to say that when the Senator spoke about cotton-seed oil he did me the honor to look very closely at me.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. MONEY. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I said the other day, in opening the debate on this side, that I was not here representing the cotton-seed-oil men, and I did not speak for that industry or for any other one industry; that I spoke for the masses of the people of the United States who could not buy butter and who could buy oleomargarine. That was my declaration. So I am absolved from the Senator's criticism.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator's pardon for looking at him. I had no reference to the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, there is a great talk here about the laboring men being opposed to this bill because they can not buy butter. How has this movement been worked up among the laboring men? It has been worked up as a good many other phases of this opposition have been worked up.

Mr. MONEY. In the same way that the bill was worked up by the dairymen.

Mr. SPOONER. If the farmers of the United States, 5,000,000 of them, engaged in the business of producing butter have in this one instance succeeded in organizing in imitation of other classes and other interests, I am glad of it. But I see no evidence of it. Petitions have been sent out here to the laboring men throughout the country—I can prove it if anyone doubts it—by gentlemen who are here in their professional capacity fighting this bill.

Printed petitions have been sent out to be circulated and signed representing that this product is to be taxed out of existence. That is the form in which we have received some of them here. Everyone knows how easy it is to secure such petitions. Not one of those petitions has informed those laboring people of the fact that under this bill they would be permitted to buy oleomargarine if they want to buy it at 1½ cents a pound less than they pay for it to-day, if they ever get it as oleomargarine; that at the oleomargarine price they can buy it for what it is and then color it in their homes to suit their own taste. There is an abundance of evidence here that men representing the food authorities in the great cities have gone to these establishments advertising butter and tried to buy oleomargarine and could not get it, and that when laboring men went in to buy butter—stevedores, clad in the habiliments of labor—they obtained oleomargarine, not butter.

Senators talk about subverting the interests of labor. This bill will do it. The laboring man is like every other man—he hates a cheat. He hates fraud. He knows what he wants, and pays his money for something that he wants. But he does not want to pay a portion of his day's earnings for butter and receive oleomargarine or butterine. He wants the real thing he pays for at the price of butter. That has been done in every State and every city of this Union. It is habitually done. The business is carried on with the utmost skill. This bill will prevent it, in my judgment. The testimony before the House committee is, and they saw it demonstrated, that one can take oleomargarine and, without heating it, color as he chooses at a very trifling expense, without machinery and in a very few moments. This bill authorizes that to be done. If any man wants to buy it and color it and put it upon his table for his family or his guests, he can do it.

Mr. MONEY. That is entirely superfluous. We could not prevent it. We would have no right to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. Who could not prevent it?

Mr. MONEY. Neither Congress nor anybody else.

Mr. SPOONER. They could prevent it by saying that anybody who colored it shall be considered a manufacturer.

Mr. MONEY. Not when for his own use.

Mr. SPOONER. No matter; it is here.

Mr. MONEY. It is useless.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not so useless. It may save a vast deal of trouble, and it puts every man on notice that he may color it for use in his own home, but if he sells it he is deemed a manufacturer and subject to the provisions of this bill as to its manufacture.

The laboring man has his full share of pride. He will not consider this an unjust law to him. It is a bill to protect him, in common with the rest of his fellow-citizens, against imposition. The laboring man will not any more feed it to his sick child, or to a sick wife, or a sick father, or a sick mother, or any one dear to him in his home than you would or than I would. He would work all day and all night to buy fresh, sweet butter for an invalid. He ought to be protected against having put upon him, for those who are dear to him and whom it is his duty to protect, a fraudulent imitation of butter.

Mr. President, I have not said a word about the farmer or the dairyman. I said when I began that if the object of this bill, to me, was simply to protect one industry, through taxation, from legitimate competition with another honest industry it would not meet my favor.

Mr. MONEY. Illegitimate?

Mr. SPOONER. No; legitimate. I would not ask it, nor would the farmer ask it. But, Mr. President, I find no objection to this tax and to these regulations and to the protection of the consumers of the country against imposition, and to obtaining this revenue for the Government, in the fact that it will also eliminate an unjust competition with the dairy product of the country. Do Senators?

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator ask me?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not want to make a speech upon this question, but—

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will not. I am nearly through, and I am anxious to be through.

Mr. RAWLINS. I want to invite the attention of the Senator to two or three things.

Mr. SPOONER. How many?

Mr. RAWLINS. Two or three. Will the Senator permit me? If not, I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. The object of this bill is to suppress imposition and fraud upon the people of the United States. There are three primary colors. The bill seems to me to allow the owner of the cow to register a trade-mark under the protection of national authority on one of those, namely, yellow, or any shade of yellow. There remain but two other colors. The Senator says that is to protect the public against fraud and imposition. Now, when the given article is offered upon the market in the nature of oleomargarine or butter, there is the color—

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator ought to argue this matter now.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am pretty nearly through. There is the color, there is the taste, there is the smell, and there is the feeling, the texture. If you suppress the color, why not suppress the taste? If it tastes like butter, why not tax that? If it feels like butter, why not tax that? Is not the mischief here? Does not the fraud consist in selling any article as an offered article of one character or quality for another article or character of article, without disclosing the nature of the thing which is disposed of?

What I should like to ask the Senator is, Why, instead of striking at the color, which is a harmless thing, and taxing that, the bill does not tax the fraud? If oleomargarine colored in imitation of butter is offered upon the market and the market is informed that it is oleomargarine, there is no wrong in the color, is there, and why tax the color?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, Mr. President, that is a pretty long question, but it is easily answered. Oleomargarine and butterine have the odor of butter; they have the butter taste; but notwithstanding they have the odor of butter and the butter taste, without the color of butter nobody would mistake oleomargarine and butterine for butter.

Mr. RAWLINS. If it had the color, but not the taste or smell, how would people be imposed on?

Mr. SPOONER. I am talking of the case as it is and the Senator is talking of it as it is not. They have stolen the livery of butter to serve a fraud and to accomplish a fraud. People might buy it as a substitute for butter because it has the odor of butter and because it has the taste of butter, but they would not buy it for butter. But, having the odor of butter and the taste of butter, if you add to it the color of butter, then you have a counterfeit that to the eye, to the sense of smell, and to the taste is complete, and that is the fraud. If you take away the color of butter, leaving the taste and the odor of butter, there is no possibility of imposition. That is all that is asked here. If this bill is efficient, as I hope it will, they can put on the market, made as finely as possible, as much like butter as possible in taste and in odor, and, in fact, for what it is, oleomargarine, but not as butter. As I said a while ago, they may do what they please in giving odor to oleomargarine, in giving taste to oleomargarine, in giving color to oleomargarine, it is still oleomargarine.

Butter has always been colored some at times. In certain seasons of the year fifty years ago the farm wife used, I have heard, carrots once in a while to color butter.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. When the Senator makes the assertion that butter has always been colored he will allow me to say that perhaps somewhere in the world it has been done, but I myself was brought up on a farm where butter was made, and from my earliest recollection I never saw any butter colored on the farm.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not so old—

Mr. TELLER. I venture to say now that the coloring of butter has come within the last thirty-five or forty years. It was unknown before that time.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, forty years would make it older than oleomargarine for butter color.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me to add one word more, in my early youth as a clerk in a country store in the butter country of New York, I bought thousands and thousands of pounds of butter that we shipped to New York City. I never saw during my service in that capacity a pound of butter that was colored, and nobody else saw it.

Mr. SPOONER. I saw butter colored when I was a lad, 13 or 14 years old, and it was good butter.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator does not realize that I am considerably older than he is.

Mr. SPOONER. I remember it very well. It was colored by as honest a woman as ever lived, and was good, pure, fresh butter. I think she used carrots in some way.

Mr. President, it surely can not be to any man an objection to this bill that it also will protect the dairy products of the United States against a counterfeit. By the preliminary report of the Twelfth Census it appears that 1,050,000,000 pounds of butter are produced on the farms of the country; 420,131,343 pounds are produced in creameries; an aggregate butter production of 1,470,131,343 pounds; 71 per cent produced upon the farms and 29 per cent the product of creameries. Oleomargarine colored and sold for butter is not justly to be called a competitor. It is a fraud.

I do not stop to deal with the relation of the cattle industry to this subject. That has been admirably and completely dealt with by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS]. It is shown that upon any theory the loss per head of cattle would be less than 25 cents, and I am quite certain that the cattle raiser, whether on the ranch or on the farm, would not lose that. He sells on the hoof, and I do not believe that a profit from any by-product of the animal goes to him.

I have been little given, I think I may safely say, to talk which from any standpoint could be deemed demagogic. I was not raised on a farm, and regret to say I know as little as any man about the practical operations of the farm. I can not speak, therefore, of happy memories of farm life; but I have a right to remind Senators of the fact that it will hardly do to call this "class" legislation because it benefits the agriculture of the United States. It is only a truism to say that agriculture in its relation to our well-being and prosperity is basic. The world could not get on without the farmer. The railroads would be quite idle without crops, and if some terrible blight should come upon the agriculture of the country what would become of our people, our manufactures, our labor, our general business?

The farmers produce what we need to wear and what we need to eat. Their operations excite universal interest. The news of frost in the corn belt, or of some menace to the cotton crop or the wheat crop, excites every market of the world and affects instantly values on all exchanges.

Those who engage in agriculture in the United States, and upon whom we thus depend, are hardly to be considered a "class" in the sense in which that word has been used in connection with this bill. We deal sometimes with class legislation, however. We have measures pending in this Congress primarily for the benefit of classes.

But I can not look upon this from any standpoint as class legislation, and the incidental benefit which would come from it to agriculture is not in any wise to be deplored nor successfully to be employed against the constitutionality or wisdom of this proposed legislation. The farmers have very little direct and especial benefit from our laws. If this shall be an exception, it need afford no one ground for regret.

Mr. President, I have been much interrupted. I intended to take not over an hour; and so as not to detain the Senate longer I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks some extracts which I have here, and which I shall not attempt to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have been suffering with a very troublesome irritation of my throat for several days, and I had, on that account, abandoned my intention of addressing the Senate, because I felt that it would be impossible for me to speak in the manner and at the length which I desired. But the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], so interesting in all of its parts, and commanding my unqualified assent on almost every legal proposition which he submitted to the Senate, differs so widely from what I understand to be the facts, both as asserted by scientific experts, and as accepted by practical men, that I have been prompted to reconsider my determination, and I shall detain the Senate for at least a brief time. If the condition of my throat renders it impossible for me to conclude this afternoon, I shall crave the indulgence of the Senate at to-morrow's session.

For the sake of clearness, as well as for the sake of brevity, I shall attempt to consider this bill first in its legal aspects, and next upon its merit, or rather upon its lack of merit as an economic measure. Of course I perfectly understand how impossible it is in a discussion of this kind to prevent these two questions from blending at certain points; but I believe it is possible, and I know it is desirable, to keep them reasonably well separated. The Senator from Wisconsin, who is not only one of the most skillful debaters, but is also one of the most accomplished lawyers in this body, has stated his propositions of law so clearly and so forcibly that I shall adopt them substantially as he laid them down. Only at one point in the course of his entire speech did I think he evaded a question of law, and that was as to the power of Congress to abdicate its control over perfectly wholesome articles of interstate and foreign commerce. It is very true, as asserted by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the Supreme Court of the United States in the Rahrer case has affirmed the power of Congress to subject interstate commerce in certain articles to the law of the several States.

But, Mr. President, that court did not say, even in the Rahrer case, and I sincerely hope it will never say in any case, that as to articles not involving the question of police power Congress can abdicate its function of regulating commerce among the several States and with foreign nations. The Senator from Wisconsin must agree with me in this opinion, because when I broadened the question so as to leave out the particular subject now under consideration and asked him if he believed that Congress could enact a general law submitting all articles of interstate and foreign commerce to the jurisdiction of the several States, he answered with a most emphatic negative. He said that no sane man—I do not repeat his exact words, but I do represent his literal meaning—would contend for such a proposition. I agree with him, and if we are both right in the opinion that Congress could not by a single enactment subject all articles of interstate and foreign commerce to the jurisdiction of the several States, then certainly it has no power to subject one article after another until it has subjected them all and completely divested itself of that very power for the exercise of which, as has so often been said, the present Government was originally established. This difference of opinion, if it really be a difference, between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself is, however, of no practical importance in this discussion, in view of other questions of law on which we are at agreement.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

Mr. President, let us first consider the purpose of this bill, and inquire whether Congress can find any warrant in the Constitution for serving such a purpose. I am thoroughly convinced that its sole and only purpose is to destroy the oleomargarine industry in order to relieve the butter industry of its competition; but as its advocates disclaim this purpose I shall not ask the Senate to accept my view, and I will allow those who have framed and who support the measure to state its object. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who is chairman of the committee which reported it to the Senate, and who opened the debate in favor of it, declares in the very first paragraph of his speech that—

This bill proposes to put a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine when it is colored so as to make it pass for an entirely different and more valuable product, and to reduce the present tax of 2 cents per pound to one-fourth of 1 cent per pound when it is not colored so as to deceive purchaser and consumer. It also subjects it to the laws of any State into which it may come, although it may have been introduced therein in original packages. It may be claimed that this is a measure to tax a legitimate industry out of existence. We claim that it only affects the fraud; that it may and should prevent this product from masking under false colors, and that the legitimate industry will be benefited rather than injured as the present tax is reduced.

The Senator from Iowa, whose brilliant oration is easily the feature of the debate, and who is himself a member of the committee which reported the bill, as well as one of its most earnest advocates, declared:

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that the object of this bill, if I have understood it correctly, is to put a stop to an abuse which has long existed in the American market place—an abuse which has worked a very special hardship upon a great agricultural industry of the country, and in a lesser degree upon the whole community.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], who is also a member of the committee having charge of the bill, and therefore qualified to speak of its purpose, used these words:

As is well known, Congress has jurisdiction to punish fraud in its public service, but has no authority within one of the sovereign States, as an original matter of jurisdiction, to entertain a complaint of that kind. But what have we done? For the purpose of throwing the influence of this great Government against fraud, we have enacted penalties for the use of our mails by fraudulent enterprises. A rigid enforcement of that enactment, which has penalties adequate to punish the fraud, has rid many a State of fraudulent nuisances that might otherwise have escaped the State jurisdiction. So that it may almost be said that this Government has been ingenious in its efforts to acquire jurisdiction to rebuke fraudulent practices.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] said:

As I understand the bill, it is precisely the opposite of that, its chief aim and purpose being to compel the manufacturers of and dealers in oleomargarine to be just, moral, and honest; to discontinue the perpetration of fraud, and conduct their business squarely and legitimately. That seems to be the underlying principle of the bill, and surely that is commendable.

In addition to these explicit and repeated declarations, made by these distinguished Senators in the presence of the Senate, I could produce many as strong, or even stronger, declarations to the same effect coming from gentlemen outside of Congress, who are the real originators and promoters of this legislation; but I prefer to try this phase of the question, at least, upon the statement of Senators, and I will reserve these other instances for another place. In the face of what these distinguished Senators have said when speaking to that very point, can any man entertain an honest doubt that the purpose of this bill is to suppress and punish fraudulent practices in the sale of oleomargarine? If there be any here who doubt that purpose, it can only be those of us who believe that there is a deeper and more unlawful purpose still in the minds of those who support this measure. I shall feel compelled further on in what I have to say to speak of that deeper and more unlawful purpose and to impeach the candor of the Senators, or the candor of those outsiders who are behind this legislation and who have either imposed upon the Senators or else have induced these Senators to impose upon the Senate.

But leaving all of that for its proper time in this discussion, and coming to the point which is now at issue, the question is: Has Congress any constitutional power to define and punish fraudulent practices in the sale of oleomargarine? What will the lawyers of this body say on that question? We all remember the pointed manner in which the Senator from Massachusetts denied the existence of such a power. I well recall that just after the brilliant Senator from Iowa had concluded his magnificent oration, the eloquence of which delighted us all, but the logic of which some of us could not follow, the Senator from Massachusetts arose in his place and declared that if the arguments advanced with so much eloquence by the Senator from Iowa were all that could be offered in behalf of this bill, he could not support it. The Senator from Massachusetts does not happen at this time to be in his seat, and in order to avoid all possibility of anyone supposing that I have misstated his position, I will take the liberty of reading his exact words from the RECORD. They were these:

So if all the arguments which have been stated with so much eloquence and force against the abuses of the manufacture of this spurious article were all that existed I not only could not give it my support, but I should be bound to resist the measure as one carrying with it an extreme danger.

Although I deemed this of itself sufficient, I was delighted this afternoon to hear the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] add his authority—I will not say to the greater authority of the Senator from Massachusetts, because no authority is greater on a question of the law than that of the Senator from Wisconsin; but I will say that I was delighted to hear him add his equal authority in denying the right of the Federal Government to assume jurisdiction and control over fraudulent sales of food products in the States.

Not only did the Senator from Massachusetts explicitly declare that Congress has no such power as the advocates of this bill assert, but he declared that the assertion of such a power was fraught with the greatest possible danger. Here are his words, and I earnestly commend them to the thoughtful members of this body, and still more earnestly to thoughtful men throughout the country:

I think one of the greatest dangers to the country now is the danger that the principle will be established that we may use the taxing power of the Government as a means either of punishing or suppressing vice and all crime or any form of wrongdoing. We have, in my judgment, no right under the Constitution to use the taxing power for that purpose. If we have, we can usurp into the hands of Congress the entire power of criminal and penal legislation in this country. We can punish polygamy or murder or burglary or any form of offense against the safety of business like stockjobbing and attempt to reach it in a way by which the measure, on the part of the State, can be defeated, and so get all the powers which belong to the States indirectly into our hands.

It seems, Mr. President, that I could rest my contention against the power of Congress to punish fraudulent sales within a State upon the practically unanimous judgment of this side of the Chamber, reinforced by the judgment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], of whom I can say, without any invidious comparison, there are not two greater lawyers in this body.

But, sir, there is a stronger and a more conclusive argument than all of this to be found in the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. In the very first paragraph of the Rahrer case that court, speaking through Chief Justice Fuller, declares:

The power of the State to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the General Government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

Again, in the case of Plumley v. Massachusetts the court met this precise question, and laid down the following doctrine:

If there be any subject over which it would seem the States ought to have plenary control and the power to legislate in respect to which it ought not to be supposed was intended to be surrendered to the General Government, it is the protection of the people against fraud and deception in the sale of food products. Such legislation may, indeed, indirectly or incidentally affect trade in such products transported from one State to another State. But that circumstance does not show that laws of the character alluded to are inconsistent with the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States.

Could anything be clearer or more exactly in point? It is here expressly declared that the power to deal with the question of fraudulent sales is a power reserved to the States and not surrendered to the Federal Government, and Senators who support this bill must not only answer the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wisconsin, but they must also ignore the plain decision of the Supreme Court. It is true enough that three justices dissented in the Plumley case; but their dissenting opinion gives no comfort to the advocates of this bill, because it was based upon the explicit declaration that oleomargarine is a perfectly healthful product. The language of the court is this:

Upon this record oleomargarine is conceded to be a wholesome, palatable, and nutritious article of food in no way deleterious to the public health or welfare. It is of the natural color of butter, and looks like butter, and is often colored, as butter is, by harmless ingredients, a deeper yellow, to render it more attractive to consumers.

I do not countenance the sale of oleomargarine for butter, and these decisions do not sanction it; but I contend, and they decide, that under our form of government such frauds must be prohibited and punished by the States, and are not within the reach of Federal jurisdiction.

THE RIGHT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

But, while the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Massachusetts join us in completely repudiating the right of Congress to deal with fraudulent sales, they both declare that Congress has the right to pass this bill upon two other grounds. The first one is that under the power to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations the Federal Government has a right to control the sale of oleomargarine as a deleterious food product. Here are the words of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I read them rather than the words of the Senator from Wisconsin simply because the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts has already been printed while the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, having only just been delivered, is not, of course, yet before us. All of us, however, who heard both speeches know that they agree, and therefore the contention of one is substantially the contention of the other. The Senator from Massachusetts said:

We have undoubtedly under our right to regulate interstate commerce the right to suppress commerce in deleterious articles.

I need not controvert that proposition of law, and indeed, under the recent decisions, it probably can not be successfully controverted. If the original doctrine that all articles affecting the health and morals of the people are completely within the police powers of the States still prevailed, there would be no necessity for asserting Federal power over such articles; but since the decision in what is known as the original-package case the States would in many instances be powerless to enforce their police regulations without some action on the part of Congress.

I shall not ask the Senate to hear me complain at the decision in Leisy v. Harden, but I will be permitted to say that, in common with many other lawyers, I have always felt that the dissenting opinion in that case is the sounder and better view of the law. I have always deeply regretted that the court felt compelled to overrule its former decisions, and thus produce some confusion as to the relations between the States and the Federal Government upon matters of purely police regulations. My judgment is that it would have been much better for the country, much safer for the States, and much less perplexing for Congress if the court, following the earlier cases, had held that, in all matters affecting the health, morals, and good order of the people, the police power of the States is supreme.

Accepting that decision, and considering the consequences which might grow out of it, I freely concede that if oleomargarine is a deleterious product, then Congress has the power to regulate it as an article of interstate commerce, and that if Congress fails to supplement the legislation of the States with some suitable provision, it would fail to perform a most important duty. By conceding this much I reduce the whole contention as to this point between the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wisconsin on the one hand and myself on the other hand to a mere difference of opinion upon a question of fact.

Is oleomargarine deleterious? The Senator from Massachusetts professes no knowledge upon that subject, while the Senator from Wisconsin, conscious that the overwhelming weight of testimony is against him, declares that no amount of scientific evidence can satisfy him that oleomargarine is a wholesome product, and yet, Mr. President, in almost the next sentence he quoted an eminent chemist in support of his view on another phase of the question. If we can not accept the testimony of scientific experts upon matters like this, then we might as well have lived in the Middle Ages, and Congress must legislate blindfold and in the dark. As for my part, I believe in the progress of science, as I believe in the progress of art and invention, and I readily accept the testimony of eminent and educated scientists when they all concur. If driven to choose amongst their varying and conflicting opinions I might hesitate, and, indeed, in an important matter I would hesitate, but when they all agree in expressing the same opinion it is not creditable to the intelligence of a Senator to say that he utterly rejects their evidence.

The chief proponent of this bill, the president of the American Dairymen's Association, says they do not press the question of the wholesomeness of oleomargarine because it is immaterial. His language was this:

In pressing Congress for protection against the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine, the dairymen have refrained from discussing to any extent the wholesomeness of the article, for the simple reason that we regarded that immaterial.

I can not refrain in passing from calling attention to the fact that Governor Hoard confesses this to be a question of fraudulent sales, and considers the health of the consumers as entirely immaterial.

In the cases reported from the Supreme Court of the United States the defendant in every instance, I believe, offered to prove that oleomargarine is a wholesome and palatable food product; and in the Schollenberger case, to which the Senator from Wisconsin referred, the decision was based upon the ground that it is a merchantable and wholesome article of food. With the experts both in this and in other countries testifying to its purity, its palatability, and its healthfulness, with the courts of the country basing their decisions upon that as a truth, will Senators blindly persist in rejecting the testimony of the men who must be presumed to understand the question in order to find a justification before their conscience for a vote like this?

I believed for years that oleomargarine was unclean and unwholesome, because I accepted the statement made so recklessly and by so many people. But there can be no good excuse for any man whose duty it is to legislate with reference to this article to be ignorant about it now.

The learned professor of chemistry at Columbia College, Prof. C. F. Chandler, says:

I have studied the question of its use as food in comparison with the ordinary butter made from cream, and have satisfied myself that it is quite as valuable as the butter from the cow. The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food.

Professor Alvord, formerly of the Massachusetts College of Agriculture, says practically the same thing. Doubtless Professor Alvord would accept, without hesitation, the legal opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts, and will not the Senator from Massachusetts accept the scientific opinion of Professor Alvord? Professor Alvord says:

The great bulk of butterine and its kindred products is as wholesome, cleaner, and in many respects better than the low grades of butter of which so much reaches the market.

Professor Schweitzer, professor of chemistry at the University of the State of Missouri, says:

As a result of my examination, made both with the microscope and the delicate chemical tests applicable to such cases, I pronounce butterine to be wholly and unequivocally free from any deleterious or in the least objectionable substances. Carefully made physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in the palatability and digestibility between butterine and butter.

Mr. President, I could multiply these evidences until I had exhausted my own strength and the patience of the Senate, and I could not then recite all of the testimony to the same effect. There is, however, one other expert opinion which I desire to quote at some greater length, and as I also desire to call the attention of the Senate to an extract from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, if it is agreeable to the Senate I would prefer to yield the floor now and resume my remarks at to-morrow's session.

I discover that my throat begins to give me a little trouble. I desire to analyze the decision in the Plumley case more closely than I will be able to do this afternoon. I hesitate, however, to ask that this matter shall go over until to-morrow for my convenience, because I said to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that I thought we could reach a vote this afternoon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I shall be very glad, Mr. President, to accommodate the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I believe I will, with the permission of the Senate, resume the floor when this bill is taken up to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. I presume the Senator from Texas and those on the other side would be willing, for the general convenience, to fix some time when a vote might be taken. It would be a great convenience, as many Senators are asking me that question.

Mr. BAILEY. That is entirely agreeable to me if it is to the Senator from Mississippi, who has charge of this matter on our side.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PROCTOR. That some hour may be fixed to-morrow, or I will say Thursday afternoon, to be entirely certain that there will be time enough for all, for a vote on this measure.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that so far as I am informed there is no one else on this side who desires to speak.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not know of any one.

Mr. BATE. I do not know but that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] wishes to speak. He is not now in his seat.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say, in answer to the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senator from Alabama told me to-day that he does not wish to speak.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the bill can be voted on to-morrow and probably at an earlier hour than the Senator from Vermont expects.

Mr. PROCTOR. It would be a personal convenience to me if we could have an hour fixed, as I expect to go away. I would quite as soon have it Thursday afternoon, if the hour can be fixed.

Mr. BAILEY. It would suit me a good deal better to continue what I have to say—

Mr. COCKRELL. Any hour on Thursday. Let us agree to that.

Mr. PROCTOR. Any hour on Thursday.

Mr. BATE. What hour is most agreeable?

Mr. TELLER. Before we adjourn.

Mr. PROCTOR. I beg pardon.

Mr. TELLER. Some hour on Thursday before we adjourn.

Mr. PROCTOR. Say at 4 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. Just say before adjournment.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Vermont can easily discern the trouble with my throat. I have some expectation that it might improve more over a day, and I would be glad if the bill could be laid aside until Thursday, and that we resume its consideration then. Possibly I can finish what I have to say then better than to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. That would be entirely agreeable if there are no others who wish to speak. I know of none on this side.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it be understood that the Senator from Texas will go on Thursday, and if anybody wants to speak to-morrow he will not be prevented. If no one wishes to speak, the bill can be laid aside. I think there may be some others who wish to speak.

Mr. WELLINGTON. It may be possible that I may have some remarks to inflict on the Senate upon the pending bill. I should not like to have an arrangement made by which I should be shut off.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can the Senator go on to-morrow?

Mr. WELLINGTON. Yes; I will be ready to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the arrangement proposed will not interfere with him at all.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Maryland can have the time to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Very well. I have no objection to offer under those circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont state the request he makes for unanimous consent?

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask a unanimous-consent agreement that a vote be taken on this bill and the amendments then pending at some hour on Thursday afternoon.

Mr. BACON. Or amendments which may be offered.

Mr. PROCTOR. I beg pardon.

Mr. BACON. Or which may be offered.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to make a suggestion to be incorporated in that agreement, and that is that upon any amendment at that time offered there may be allowed a five-minute debate.

Mr. BATE. That is right.

Mr. FORAKER. An amendment might be offered and we would not understand it, and under the unanimous-consent agreements heretofore made there would be no opportunity given to explain it.

Mr. PROCTOR. I accept that, and suggest, in view of that amendment, that we fix the hour at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon.

Mr. CULLOM. For a vote?

Mr. PROCTOR. For the consideration of any amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FORAKER. The understanding would be that as to amendments already pending there would not be allowed five minutes' debate, but that such debate should be allowed only as to amendments then offered of which the Senate had no previous notice.

Mr. BACON. I think it would be better not to put upon it the limitation now suggested by the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Let us agree that as to all amendments now pending or that may hereafter be offered there may be debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PROCTOR. Very well; I will accept that suggestion, that upon all amendments then pending, at 3 o'clock, or that may be then offered—

Mr. BACON. Thereafter offered.

Mr. PROCTOR. Debate for five minutes shall be allowed.

Mr. CULLOM. Beginning at 3 o'clock.

Mr. PROCTOR. Beginning at 3 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next at 3 o'clock the Senate shall proceed to vote upon all amendments then pending or that may be offered to the bill now under consideration, debate to be had on such amendments under the five-minute rule, and that the final vote on the bill shall be taken before adjournment on that day. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM obtained the floor.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me a moment?

Mr. CULLOM. I will.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] offered an amendment, quite a lengthy one, and I know many Senators take a good deal of interest in it. I am not aware of any opposition to it. I believe he wishes to offer a small amendment to it. Inasmuch as it necessitates some verbal amendments in the bill, if the amendment could be adopted this afternoon I would ask for a reprint of the whole bill.

Mr. MONEY. There has been no argument on the amendment. The disposition is to accept it on all hands, but we must have an analysis of it. We have not got it from hearing it read at the desk, and I do not suppose anybody has particularly studied it, because it was not expected that it would be voted on until the others came up. So I think the Senator had better let all the amendments go together.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. MONEY. One moment. In the meanwhile, if amendments are proposed to the amendment, the framer of the amendment can amend it and have a reprint of it.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I desire, and I ask that now. I desire to offer an amendment on page 6 of the amendment which I offered before, and I ask to have it read and inserted, and then that there be a reprint of the entire amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment to the amendment hitherto submitted by himself. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, of the substitute, line 14, after the word "pound" it is proposed to insert the following:

And that upon process or renovated butter, when manufactured or sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks that the amendment as now proposed to be amended be reprinted. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to interrogate the Senator from Vermont having this bill in charge as to whether he expects to go on with the bill to-morrow. I have just come into the Chamber and am not familiar with the status of business in that connection.

Mr. PROCTOR. I myself am obliged to be away to-morrow. I know of no one who wishes to speak to-morrow, except the Senator from Maryland. There may be others. I doubt it, however. I do not expect that the time will be occupied very much to-morrow. So far as I know it will not.

Mr. PENROSE. I would ask unanimous consent—

Mr. PROCTOR. Perhaps I ought not to say that without the presence of the Senator from Texas. The Senator from Texas may wish to go on to-morrow, and he may not until the day after.

Mr. PENROSE. I would ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the measure known as the Chinese-exclusion bill be the order of business, if no one is prepared between now and Thursday to speak upon the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. PENROSE). You can get in to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have that understanding.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the order of business, the Chinese-exclusion bill is to be taken up immediately after this measure is concluded. Has not that been the understanding?

Mr. PENROSE. That has been my understanding. I do not know how far it has been the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. There has been no agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us not act upon it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest, inasmuch as there is to be a vote on the pending bill on Thursday at 3 o'clock, that it might not be well to make any arrangement which would interfere with its discussion in the meantime.

Mr. CULLOM (to Mr. PENROSE). Let it go over.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not press his request.

Mr. PENROSE. I will give notice, then, that if there is a break in the discussion upon the oleomargarine bill, I shall ask the Senate to take up the Chinese-exclusion bill, the necessity for prompt action upon which is evident to everyone, in view of the fact that the Geary law expires early next month.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13123, being the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that motion, I desire to state that unanimous consent was given to close the debate with the adjournment of yesterday. I desire to modify that, as two gentlemen desire a little time, and when we reach the five-minute rule I want the debate, if I can get it that way, to proceed on the bill proper. I therefore ask unanimous consent that general debate be extended for thirty-five minutes, twenty minutes of which time to be given to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13123, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and pending that, asks unanimous consent for an extension of time from that fixed in the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent yesterday to thirty-five minutes, twenty minutes of which to be yielded to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] and fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13123, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair, and proceeded to the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] on yesterday forcibly called attention to the departure from self-government that has been the characteristic policy of the House of Representatives in the last few Congresses.

I interrupted long enough to suggest that the Republican party alone was responsible for this lamentable condition.

He supplemented his remarks with well-chosen newspaper articles, a few among the thousands that have teemed with denunciation because we have permitted ourselves to be tyrannized over in a manner that destroys our representative character.

Time will not permit me to enumerate the resolutions and measures held up, the measures passed without opportunity for debate and amendment, the measures forced through without committee consideration, and the many unusual proceedings sanctioned by the present rules of the House.

Nor shall I depart long enough to refer to the great measures of legislation that have gone from the House to the Senate imperfect in substance and effect, with the hope, on the part of the Republican leaders, felt, if not expressed, that the Senate would perfect the legislation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Do you expect to find perfection in the Senate? Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The form of the gentleman's question shows that he shares in an opinion that has often been expressed, that the Senate is not as representative as the House. A little later on I will have occasion to refer to the greatness and power of the State of Pennsylvania, which in part he so ably represents, and the reason that exists why no portion of our power should be surrendered or delegated to the Senate.

I need not support these statements by the evidence of instances, like the Philippine revenue bill, where a substantial reduction amendment was accepted by the Republican House leaders without serious opposition. Suffice to say, that the whole record is known to the country.

A great portion of yesterday was devoted to the question of representation that intimately and vitally affects the South, and, as well, vitally and intimately affects the North commercially, sectionally, and in every way.

But, sir, the representation that I shall discuss affects every member in his individual independence, and every section in equal degree. I refer to the passing of the House of Representatives as a representative body and the elevation of the Senate to that great distinction.

I want to advert to the effect of this transition. A few men, the Rules Committee, dominate the business of the House.

They have a power, an unwonted power, over our legislation. They are able men and patriotic, but no more so than they are loyal to their own districts, their own States.

In this country of diversified interests, where a State or a district or a group of States may stand for a special interest, to a large exclusion of others, no such power can be lodged in the hands of a small group of Representatives upon the floor without enhancing, unduly and unjustly, those States, those districts, and those sections at the expense of power that belongs equally and justly to all.

I make no complaint of the Speaker's exercise of power, nor of that exercise by the Rules Committee of which he is a member, nor of its exercise by his associates on the committee. Any member, I assume, would do likewise if he had the mandate of the House. But, sir, it gives to the district represented on that committee, and to the State within which that district lies, a power and influence in the direction and control of legislation that was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution. And, sir, no set of men were bold enough to exercise such a power till the last few Congresses.

The modes of procedure by which the last three Congresses were tyrannized over and their inception were not dissimilar.

Each time, at the very beginning of the session, after organization, a member of the former Rules Committee—and in each case it has so happened that he became his own successor—would rise and urge the adoption of the rules of the former Congress as the rules of the then Congress, giving as the only reason that they had been the rules of the former Congress, and supplement this by moving the previous question, to cut off debate and right to amend.

Then, without opportunity to debate or propose amendments and without committee consideration, the successive motions were carried; and the new members of the House aided in the inflection on themselves of rules that made them cringing sycophants to the one-man power in the House.

Sir, what is the effect of transferring representative government from the House of Representatives to the Senate?

I make no complaint of the constitutional provision that gives each of the smaller States an equal representation in the Senate. I complain of the drastic rules of the House, and of the Rules Committee, which is their progeny. I complain of the peculiar and tyrannical procedure that destroys independence; destroys the individual representation of their districts by members on the floor. Were it otherwise, the people, and we, as their representatives, could offset the constitutional advantage enjoyed by the smaller States in equal representation in the Senate.

The people, knowing of the bondage that exists in the House under the Reed rules, are demanding, with almost a unanimous voice, and not without cause, that the Constitution be amended, that the Senators may be closer in responsibility to the people.

I compliment the Republicans of the House for their recent unanimous vote in favor of that proposition, but censure is upon them for creating, in great measure, the necessity for it.

I find in the vote of the Republicans, joining with us in favor of the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people, a confession that this House, under the rules and the domination of the Rules Committee, has ceased to be a representative body. This confession is privately made by nearly all of you. It is unfortunate, for you have the power of correction.

Do you realize the situation in which you place yourselves and the districts you represent when you abdicate any portion of your full and independent representation and send measures to the Senate for due and orderly procedure, for consideration, and for legislation?

I have prepared a chart of the States, giving their power on the House floor, giving their voting population of 1900, and giving their power in the Senate of the United States. The number of the States—45—have favored me. I have taken the first 9 of the largest States, one-fifth of the whole number of States, and the last 15 of the smallest States, one-third of the whole number. I desire now to make a comparison which will show the misfortune to the people that comes from sending legislation to the Senate for enactment, by which you of New York and Pennsylvania, proud of your States, the first and second in the Union, with 34 and 30 members, respectively, of Congress, that gives you a power of one out of six on this floor, and you of other States, abdicate your powers on the floor of the House.

The first State to which I shall allude and make comparison is the State of Nevada, with less than 10,000 voters in the election of 1900, the smallest State, yet Nevada has her two Senators, equal to the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Massachusetts, Indiana, Texas, Michigan, each being within the 9 largest States and having 12 or more Representatives. Seven of the States are grouped in relation to their having a single Representative upon the floor. Eight of the States are grouped with reference to their having two Representatives upon the floor. The small States of Idaho, Delaware, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming, 7 States with 7 members on this floor out of 357, have 14 Senators in the Senate, to which body you send matters for legislation, without a proper assertion of your own independence and the right of individual representation due to your constituencies.

The population of these seven States is 313,000. The voting population of New York, which holds one-tenth of the power in this body, is 1,547,000 voters. She has 2 Senators, and so has the little State of Nevada. Aye, with the 7 States having a population of 313,000, New York, with its million and a half of voting population, is short 12 votes in the Senate on matters of legislation; her strength in the House is 1 out of 10, in the Senate 1 out of 45. New York, so large, so powerful, stands as a pigmy in the Senate in the presence of these 7 small States.

Now, I come to the State of Pennsylvania, represented on this floor by 30 members. And I will suggest to my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that when you add to the 7 smallest States those States having on this floor 2 members of Congress—Colorado, Florida, New Hampshire, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Washington, and Vermont—you get 15 States of the Union that have in the Senate as many Senators as you of Pennsylvania have Representatives on this floor.

Therefore, Pennsylvania, with its 1,373,000 voters, as against the 313,000 of the 7 States having but 1 Representative each here, is placing the legislation of this country in the hands of the Senate. The smallest States, 15 in all, have on this floor 23 members of Congress and 30 Senators; the 15 smaller States of this Union have 7 more Senators than they have members of the House. One-third the membership of the Senate is made up from the 15 smallest States of the Union, and we find that the total population of the 15 States of the Union having the smallest population is 1,064,000 voters. Remember that they have one-third of the membership in the Senate. The great State of New York, as against that 1,064,000 of voting population in those 15 smallest States, has on this floor 34 Representatives; but, as against the population of those States that have 30 Senators, she has 1,547,000 voters. The great State of Pennsylvania has 1,173,000 voters. And what have these 15 States that dominate the Senate? They have a total of 1,064,000. Therefore, the power of these 15 States in the Senate is one-third, but the power of those same States in this House only 1 out of 15.

The State of Illinois, with a voting population of 1,100,000, is greater than the little States that send 30 Senators to the United States Senate. The State of Ohio, with a voting population of 1,040,000, is equal to them. The State of Missouri, with 683,000, and Indiana, with 664,000, nearly approach them, and with Massachusetts, 414,000, Texas, 412,000, running down to the ninth State, the State of Michigan, with 544,000 voters and 12 members of Congress, which includes all those with 12 Representatives and more on this floor—those nine largest States have a total power on this floor of one-half, and yet they are offset in the Senate of the United States by 9 of the 15 smallest States, the 15 States having 30 members, or one-third of that body. Nine States, representing on this floor one-half of the membership here, only have the power of one-fifth in the United States Senate. The States I have mentioned, the smaller States, have 7 more Senators than they have Representatives, and yet the Representatives in this body will, by reason of the peculiar and tyrannical operation of its rules and its Rules Committee, turn over to the Senate for legislation and for conservation the great legislative interests of their people. How can you of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Massachusetts, or any other State justify such action?

Mr. Chairman, we have a condition prevailing that should appeal to every member of the House who stands for independent representation of constituency and for individualism. You are all interested—for or against—in the subject of irrigation. Who knows when it will come up? I know very many hope that it will never come up. It may be that the Rules Committee will refuse consideration for it; it will never come up except by their special favor; but let the responsibility rest where it belongs. Many insist that it shall not come up; many insist that it shall come up; but if it ever comes up, note you, Representatives from the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Massachusetts, Indiana, Texas, and Michigan, note you the power you are giving to the Senate in this matter by the peculiar and singular enforcement of your rules.

The ship-subsidy bill is another great question upon which many of you Republicans desire to vote. Will you vote upon it? I do not know, you do not know; only the Rules Committee know. In their peculiar method of reaching a conclusion, will it ever be voted upon? Will you of Indiana ever have a chance to vote against it, or you of Minnesota or Wisconsin or Vermont, or the other members on that side who will oppose it? Yet you who desire to vote upon this ship-subsidy bill, and to vote in favor of it or against it, will have to take your chances. Why? Because, under the peculiar system of the Reed rules, you can not have your individual way—you have delegated away your power.

Another great question is Cuban reciprocity. Will you get that as you want it? Will you take your medicine in allopathic or homeopathic doses? You are subject to the extreme power, the drastic power, of the great Rules Committee, to which you my friend from New York, and you my friend from Pennsylvania, and you Republicans all have surrendered the right to represent your constituents individually upon this floor. It is true that Pennsylvania has an able, an alert, a powerful member upon the floor who is a member of that committee, but he has more power than he should have. It is true that New York has a most efficient, patriotic, and powerful member upon the floor as leader of the majority, but he has more power than he should have by reason of the Rules Committee. Are the other members from Pennsylvania, are the other members from New York ready to surrender to the power of the Rules Committee because they have these distinguished members?

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will, gladly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman in what particular the present rules and the Reed rules differ from the rules in force in the last Democratic Congress under Mr. Speaker Crisp?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman asks me a pertinent question. I came here with him in the Fifty-fifth Congress. Here are rules to which your party have given repeated sanction. If you want to claim a sanction of these rules by the precedent of the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, your party will also find a sanction for them at St. Petersburg, in Russia. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that his party should take the beam out of its own eye before it sees the mote in the eye of my party. Why should he ask me to sanction one set of rules similar to another when, on account of their similarity, I am opposed to both? Why should he justify Republican Congresses since and including the Fifty-fifth Congress when the rules are vicious on the ground that my party in a Congress where neither of us held a seat had rules equally objectionable?

The Rules Committee is ever alert to justify its course of disfranchisement by a reference to the rules of the Fifty-third Congress. They can see the mote in the Democratic eye, but can not see the beam in their own as big as a ship timber. [Laughter.] It is the rules of to-day with which we are concerned and under which we are discussing the questions of and legislating for to-day; and, Mr. Chairman, these rules, adopted first in one manner and then in another, but substantially the same always, have taken advantage of the new members of Congress, and should be wiped out as the powers of the Rules Committee should be destroyed and their powers wiped from the pages of the rules of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania at its last session passed the following concurrent resolution, approved by the governor April 24, 1901:

Whereas a large number of State legislatures have at various times adopted memorials and resolutions in favor of election of United States Senators by popular vote; and

Whereas the National House of Representatives has on four separate occasions within recent years adopted resolutions in favor of this proposed change in the method of electing United States Senators, which was not adopted by the Senate; and

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, and believing there is a general desire upon the part of the citizens of the State of Pennsylvania that the United States Senators should be elected by a direct vote of the people; Therefore,

Be it resolved (if the house of representatives concur). That the legislature of the State of Pennsylvania favors the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution which shall provide for the election of United States Senators by popular vote, and joins with other States of the Union in respectfully requesting that a convention be called for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as provided for in Article V of the said Constitution, which amendment shall provide for a change in the present method of electing United States Senators, so that they can be chosen in each State by a direct vote of the people.

This proposed change in the mode of electing United States Senators is in line of the changes that have been made at different times in the mode of selecting officials for the government of the Union. For almost half a century the electors for President and Vice-President were appointed by the legislatures of the States. South Carolina, about 1845, was the last State to change from appointment by the legislature to appointment by the vote of the people in the State.

Up to that time the Representatives in Congress were elected in each State on a general ticket, all the voters in the State voting for all the Representatives assigned to the State by act of Congress. For a long period the judges of all the courts in the several States were appointed by the governor or the legislature of the respective States.

The Government established in 1777 by the original 13 States for their common defense and general welfare under articles of confederation and perpetual union was a government of independent sovereign States, styled "The United States of America," but the enacting clause of all resolutions or acts was in a "Committee of the States in Congress assembled." Delegates to meet in Congress were appointed by each State in such manner as the legislature thereof should direct—not less than two from each State and not more than seven, each State to have one vote on all questions. The State was to maintain its own delegates in a meeting of the States and while they were acting as members of the Committee of the States.

All acts of importance passed by the committee of the States in Congress assembled were submitted to the States, and they must have the approval of the legislatures of nine of the thirteen States before they could become binding laws. In this kind of government the delegates appointed by the legislatures of the States were in fact ambassadors from sovereign, independent States. The salaries and other expenses of these delegates were paid by the State, and any of them could be recalled at any time by the respective State and other persons appointed in their stead.

But in the more perfect union formed in 1787, which superseded the old Confederacy, all legislative powers were vested in a Congress of the United States, which should consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The Senate to be composed of two Senators from each State, to be chosen by the legislature thereof, and each Senator to have one vote. This was the beginning of United States Senators. The House of Representatives was composed of members chosen by the people of the several States.

The enacting clause of all legislation was "by the Senate and the House of Representatives in Congress assembled." The salaries and other expenses of both Senators and Representatives have been paid out of the common Treasury of the Government of the Union. The Senators thus created were not ambassadors from the States, any more than were the Representatives in the House, elected by the people of the same State.

The States, in ratifying the Constitution of 1787, ceded all their powers of sovereignty as independent States to the Government of the Union. The United States Senators then first created were representatives of the people of the United States of America, with a special constituency composed of the people in their respective States.

The Senators and the Members of the House were both alike representatives of the people of the United States of America, differing only in the mode of their election. The Representatives being chosen by the direct vote of the people, while the Senators were chosen second hand by the vote of the peoples' chosen agents. Madison in the First Congress, referring to the duties of members of Congress, said: "We must consider the general interest of the Union, for it is as much every gentleman's duty as is the local or State interest."

The election of a Senator by the voters of the State instead of its legislature can not in any possible way change his relation to the State or his duty or responsibility to either the State or the nation.

The apprehension that the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people of a State might lead to the election of Senators in proportion to the population of the several States would seem to be without the least foundation. It would be impossible for that to be done by any amendment of the Constitution that might be submitted by Congress. What a constitutional convention duly called for a revision of the Constitution might do it is not necessary now to consider. But there is an express prohibition in the Constitution against any such amendment being submitted by Congress. There can be no question that the Supreme Court would hold an act of Congress submitting such an amendment as unconstitutional, for it would be in direct violation of the express prohibition in the Constitution providing for its amendment.

In the provision of the Constitution providing for its amendment there is the declaration that "no State without its consent shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate." Therefore such a change could not be made by any proposed amendment submitted by Congress, for the Supreme Court must hold that such a submission would be unconstitutional. What reason can there be for changing the method of choosing United States Senators from the legislature of the State to a direct vote of the people in the State? First, the election by the people would effectually prevent vacancies in the membership of the Senate for any considerable length of time, while the present method permits vacancies, as we have seen, for long, indefinite periods. Second, election by the people instead of by the legislature would afford less opportunity for corrupt or improper methods to be employed.

The delegates to a State convention for making nominations, many, if not a majority of them, arrive at the place for holding the convention on the morning of the day for the convention. Who are to be the delegates is in most cases unknown until a short time before the meeting of the convention. And should a nomination be secured by improper influences in any case it can be reviewed by the people before they are called upon to vote. And the candidates themselves must have qualifications for the office greater than being the mere possessors of large wealth. This of itself would be a restraining influence on all who might be inclined to use improper influences to secure an election. Third, it is consistent with the principles of free elective government that all officials, where it is feasible to do so, should be elected by a direct vote of the people. [Loud applause.]

MR. RUCKER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

MR. GROW. Certainly.

MR. RUCKER. Has the legislature of Pennsylvania ever passed a resolution requesting an amendment of the Constitution providing that each State shall have two Senators and one additional for every 500,000 inhabitants?

MR. GROW. No, sir; it has passed no such resolution.

MR. RUCKER. I thought possibly from some things which I have read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—

MR. GROW. Will the gentleman suspend? I can hardly hear what the gentleman says for the talk that is occurring between himself and me.

MR. RUCKER. I thought perhaps, not very seriously though, from what I had seen in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that possibly your legislature had taken some such action.

MR. GROW. The legislature has never passed any such resolution.

MR. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman another question? I heartily agree with all that the gentleman has said and indorse it all. Has the gentleman any information as to whether the resolutions read at the Clerk's desk have ever been delivered to the Senators from Pennsylvania?

MR. GROW. I can not answer that.

MR. RUCKER. It might be well that they should be supplied with a copy of them.

MR. GROW. The legislature of Pennsylvania has passed resolutions two or three times in favor of the submission of an amendment to the States for electing Senators by a direct vote. The last legislature coupled with that an invitation to the other States to join them in a constitutional convention to revise the Constitution so as to accomplish that.

MR. RUCKER. The gentleman has doubtless seen in the RECORD where a resolution has been introduced providing that each State shall have two Senators and an additional one for every 500,000 additional inhabitants.

MR. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I know that the RECORD contains such a proceeding. I am not here, however, to comment upon that proceeding in the Senate; but I have this to say: In a constitutional convention duly called, under their inherent power to change or alter their form of government, they would be able to put that provision in the Constitution if there was a majority for it; but the submission by Congress of an amendment to do that, the courts must hold to be unconstitutional, for the Constitution itself, in the clause providing for amendments, declares no change shall be made that will deprive a State of its equal suffrage.

Mr. RUCKER. One other statement. I trust that hereafter no gentleman in Congress will ever say that the proposition to elect Senators by the people, in a direct vote of the people, passed the House as a great joke, and that no one had discussed it.

Mr. GROW. This House at this session has passed a joint resolution for an amendment to be submitted to the States to elect Senators by direct vote of the people. It has not been acted on yet in the Senate. Four other such amendments that the House passed heretofore were never acted on by the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROW. If my time has not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office and court-house at Chicago, Ill.: For continuation of building under present limit, $1,000,000. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use out of this appropriation the sum of $40,000 for the employment of a special architect, assistants, experts, superintendents, and other skilled and clerical service to continue the plans, specifications, and superintendence of the building. This work being essentially of a temporary and special nature, the Secretary of the Treasury may employ such assistance as he sees fit, with or without compliance with the conditions prescribed by the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service," approved January 16, 1883: Provided, That the whole amount expended for the services mentioned herein shall not, including the sums heretofore authorized, exceed 5 per cent of the total limit of cost of said building.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word.

I would very much like to make an inquiry of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was stated in the public press of Chicago last summer, several days, that the work on the post-office building there was delayed because Congress had not made a sufficient appropriation. The intimation was made—in fact, the direct charge was made—that it was the fault of Congress; and although that post-office building, which has been delayed, much to the disadvantage of commercial business generally—the charge was made that this building, now approaching completion as to the outer portion of the building, can not be proceeded with because Congress had not made sufficient appropriation. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if it has any information in regard to that, and as to whether the present appropriation will be sufficient for the ensuing fiscal year?

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the gentleman's question, I will state that I noticed the same newspaper report. I would suggest, further, that I have never noticed any contradiction of it by the architect in charge or by the Supervising Architect. I called the attention of Mr. Cobb in the hearings before the subcommittee to this matter, and I will insert my question and his answer in the RECORD from page 12 of the hearings of last year:

The CHAIRMAN. And it will cost $200,000 here. There has been no delay in the appropriations in this work?

Mr. COBB. Not a bit.

I think I have put in enough to show that Mr. Cobb came before the committee, and the estimates were submitted, and the subcommittee having the matter in charge put in all that was asked by Mr. Cobb and the Department.

And as proof of that fact, the money is not yet expended. The truth is that there never has been a delay of a minute on account of appropriations. From the commencement there has been a large sum appropriated not used, and from the commencement there was full power to contract for this whole building from foundation to cupola, including the inside finish; and the delay that we all know about in Chicago is to be attributed to matters outside of the action of Congress—matters of administration. In my own opinion, perhaps Mr. Cobb is not to blame in the matter more than any other architect is to blame, but the history of administration of Government architects, whether in the Supervising Architect's office or a private architect, is that when once they get their heads into the manger they stay there as long as there is any fodder to eat. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. May I ask my colleague a further question as to whether he has any information concerning the enforcement of the penalties upon the contractor by reason of the noncompletion of this post-office building in Chicago within the contract time?

Mr. CANNON. There was a delay about the excavation of the foundation. The hearing shows there is litigation about that matter. The penalties the gentleman refers to, it is contended, are not regarded by the courts as liquidated damages. The committee has it in contemplation, not having legislative powers, however, to provide that penalties under contract for Government work shall be considered and held by the court as liquidated damages. That is legislation, however, that ought to come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and would be subject to a point of order upon a general appropriation bill. I believe, however, that such legislation ought to be had.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to find fault with the Committee on Appropriations in this matter. The Chicago post-office building has been delayed until the commencement of it is now ancient history. Last summer it was charged by the press of Chicago that the occasion for the delay in future work was because the appropriation was not sufficient. I do not know from whence these charges emanated, for it was impossible to trace the matter. Apparently they came from the office of the special architect and the Government in charge of the building. I believe he denies their authenticity as far as he is concerned. The statements were absolutely false; there was not a word of truth in them. There was an appropriation sufficient, available at all times for the work, and yet the delay was stated to be caused by Congress not having made a sufficient appropriation. But, in the face of this, they are, as I am informed, waiving the penalties, having let the contract to one contractor for the entire building, contrary to all ethics of building, waiving the penalties, and then charging the delay to the Committee on Appropriations. We have the right to resent it in behalf of that committee.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Marine hospitals: For marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio: For boiler plant and expense incident thereto, $6,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment authorized by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, after line 19, insert:

"For marine hospital at Savannah, Ga.: For commencing construction of hospital under present limit, $50,000.

"For marine hospital at Pittsburg, Pa.: For purchase of site and commencing construction of hospital under present limit, $60,000.

"For marine hospital at Buffalo, N. Y.: For purchase of site and commencing construction of hospital under present limit, $60,000.

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into contracts for the construction of the marine hospitals at Savannah, Ga., Pittsburg, Pa., and Buffalo, N. Y., within their respective authorized limits of cost."

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. It is very desirable that the marine hospital at Buffalo be completed at the earliest possible moment. I desire to ask him if the appropriation of less than the entire sum will delay the completion of the public building for any length of time?

Mr. CANNON. No, it will not. This appropriation is available on the 1st of July. Then the first thing under the law that is to be done is to acquire a site. When the site is purchased, the next thing to do under the law is to make the plans within the limit, after deducting the cost of the site.

Now, after inquiry we find that with the acquisition of the site and the making of the plans, with power to contract for the completion of the work, that it is not possible to expend more than $60,000 the coming fiscal year. And I will say to the gentleman that that work will be just as speedy in every respect as if the amendment carried the full appropriation to the limit. This is the usual provision that is carried touching public works adopting the contract system.

Mr. ALEXANDER. May I ask the gentleman a further question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I understand the gentleman from Illinois has been in correspondence with the Secretary of the Treasury, and that it is his belief that $60,000 is all that can possibly be used the coming fiscal year.

Mr. CANNON. The Secretary of the Treasury, I dare say, has not given it any personal consideration; but I have made inquiry of the Supervising Architect's Office, and I have no doubt, as a result of that inquiry, from the statement of the party in charge, the Assistant Supervising Architect, that this appropriation is ample.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my formal amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. CANNON was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For quarantine station, San Diego, Cal.: For steam launch, $7,500.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, at the end of line 11, insert:

"And all that land lying north and west of the Treasury Department quarantine station, bounded on the south by the land owned by the United States and used as a quarantine station and by First street; on the west by San Antonio avenue; on the north by Colorado street; and on the east by San Diego Bay and the said Treasury Department quarantine station, containing 6½ acres, more or less, is hereby transferred to the Treasury Department for the use of a quarantine station."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHT-HOUSES, BEACONS, AND FOG SIGNALS.

Castle Island light-house depot, Massachusetts: For establishing a light-house depot for the Second light-house district at Castle Island, $25,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, after line 15, insert:

"Broad Sound Channel light station, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: For constructing a first-order light and fog signal at the Northeast Grave, on a granite tower, to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel, in Boston Harbor, $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said light station, at a total cost not exceeding $188,000.

"Lovells Island range lights, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: For the establishment of two range lights on Lovells Island, at the mouth of Boston Harbor, $10,000.

"Spectacle Island range lights, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: For the establishment of two range lights on Spectacle Island, at the mouth of Boston Harbor, $13,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Staten Island light-house depot, New York: For the erection of a new oil house, $40,000; for the erection of a new coal shed, $20,000; in all $60,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, after line 19, add:

"For the proper care and suitable lighting of the Liberty Light, in New York Harbor, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, on the 1st day of March this year, by order of the Light-House Board, Liberty light, on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, was extinguished. Just why the Light-House Board issued that order I know not, and no one whom I have talked to about it has been able to give to me a satisfactory explanation. In my opinion there is no good reason for that order. The light from Liberty's torch should not be put out. It is essential to commerce, but more than that, it represents a patriotic sentiment that should never be extinguished.

The great statue of Liberty Enlightening the World was unveiled on the 28th day of October, 1886. It was a splendid gift from the Republic of France to the Republic of the United States. It was intended to be a bond of sympathy, of fraternal feeling, of undying memories, of lasting friendship, of eternal good will between the two great Republics. It meant sympathy for republics and republican institutions all over the world. It glorified liberty, fortified freedom, and emphasized the rights of man. It was to be and it ever should be a great beacon light of democracy, dispelling the darkness of tyranny and welcoming to our hospitable shores the oppressed of every land. It was Bartholdi's apotheosis of liberty; a gift from the greatest Republic in Europe to the greatest Republic in all the world.

Its light should shine for all the ages. It should never go out while liberty lives in the breast of man. It links the past with the present, and should be prophetic of the future.

At the unveiling of that magnificent monument to liberty, the President of the United States, the Cabinet officers, distinguished members of Congress, members of the legislatures of States, mayors of cities, judges, governors, and leading citizens from all parts of the country were present. It was a "red-letter day" in the history of this Republic. There was music, and eloquence, and ceremony. It commemorated one of the great civic events in our annals. It was an imposing celebration, and the hand on the dial plate of time marked the hour of liberty and the freedom of man.

As such a beacon it has stood by day and shone by night.

It has meant much to us in many ways. It has stood for all the ideals of the Republic, and a bright harbinger to the weary immigrant after a tedious voyage. It has shone resplendent from the day it was unveiled until the 1st of last March, and then for some hidden reason this Administration, or the Light-House Board acting under this Administration, put out the light. What a commentary! In the face of what is now going on here, in the Orient, and elsewhere, how the eloquent words of the orators on that occasion mock us. What a difference between then and now! Things have changed.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offered should be adopted by the House. It should be incorporated into this bill without a dissenting vote. Patriotism prompts it, and we should see to it that the light of Liberty should burn as brightly as ever. I do not know how much money is necessary to clean the statue, fittingly care for it, and properly light it, but my amendment appropriates $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, gives the proper authorities discretion, and they will spend no more than is absolutely required. However, if the amount is objectionable, I will make it less. All I ask is to keep the light burning. That request should meet with no opposition from liberty-loving members of Congress.

It is a sad commentary, sir, on the Republic of to-day, a sad reflection on our professions and our glorious past, that the great light of Liberty has been put out. What does it mean? Will some one rise up and tell me? In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read at this time as a part of my remarks a poem regarding this matter, written by one of our popular poets and a well-known citizen of Washington, D. C.

Mr. MONDELL. This is not an original poem; the gentleman from New York did not write it himself?

Mr. SULZER. It is an original poem. I did not write it, and what is more, I know the gentleman from Wyoming could not write it. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBERTY'S TORCH—OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Washington, D. C., February 12, 1902.

Liberty Enlightening the World light station. Notice is hereby given that on or about March 1, 1902, the fixed white electric light shown from the torch of the bronze statue on Bedloe's Island, New York Bay, will be discontinued. By order of the Light-House Board.

N. H. FARQUHAR,

Rear-Admiral, United States Navy

Put out the torch whose lustrous beams
Were lit at Freedom's council fires;
For in its flame no longer gleams
The lofty purpose of our sires.
When mouthing hypocrites efface
The noble charter of our rights
And set brute forces in its place,
Put out the signal lights!

Till our great armies cease to slay
And call the roll of Tagal dead,
Oh, let us shrink from light of day
And torch of night, and hang our head
Put out the lamp, lest it illumine
The path of our perfidious fame.
Put out the lamp, for in the gloom
We hide our scarlet shame!

Ah, when our tyrants quench in night
The freedom of the Orient sea,
Why should our goddess keep alight
The beacon flame of Liberty?
Silence the eagle on his crag!
Hush holy Freedom's vaunting hymn!
Drop down the mast the starry flag,
And douse the harbor glim!

When patriots welter in their gore
And perish where our squadrons press,
Why set this flambeau on the shore
To shine upon our wickedness?
Ah, goddess! lift no trembling hand
To light the bloody path of hate,
But let grim darkness scowling stand
And beckon at the gate!

W. A. CROFFUT.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said, from the day this magnificent statue to liberty was unveiled down to March 1, this year, no Congress has failed to pass an appropriation for this light and to properly care for it.

Since 1886 it has been a light-house essential to commerce and safe navigation in the harbor of New York. It is on all the charts. It aids to mark the channel, and every mariner, every seafaring man, has looked for it and recognized it, going in or coming out of the magnificent harbor of New York. Why is it that after all this time this light must now go out? Is liberty dead? I hope not. I am a friend of liberty here and elsewhere. As a citizen of this Republic, I take a just pride in the grandeur of Liberty Enlightening the World and for all it typifies here and symbolizes to people in other lands. I would not darken its effulgent light, but I would make it burn brighter and brighter as the years come and go. It stands at the gates of America, a magnificent altar of man's faith in liberty, whose light should penetrate the darkness of tyranny throughout the world and guide men from oppression to the hospitable shores of freedom. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I feel deeply on this subject. The responsibility of putting out Liberty's torch must rest on the Republican party. This Administration, it seems to me, will be derelict to duty, false to all the Republic stands for, and recreant to the memories of a century and the sacred friendship of France, which has existed since our Revolutionary struggle, if we now permit that great statue of Liberty to stand in the darkness. What a flood of sentiment appeals to us in this matter. Can we so soon forget the past?

Is recollection dead and gratitude a dream? Are the words of the fathers a hollow mockery? Is our past a lie, or shall liberty truly enlighten the world? Let the gentleman from Illinois and the members of this House answer. I trust the response will be for liberty and in favor of continuing the light on Bedloe's Island, in favor of keeping that great statue of Liberty Enlightening the World illumined from sundown to sunrise, so that it will be not only a guide to mariners, but a great beacon of this Republic, and in truth for all liberty enlightening the world, beckoning to our shores the downtrodden from every land and every clime. [Applause.]

Yes, my friends, this bill should carry an appropriation to keep that torch of liberty burning. The people—the liberty-loving people—expect it. We must be true to ourselves—we must not disappoint them. The light must not go out. If it goes out now, it may go out forever.

But once put out thy light,
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume.

Now, sir, just a word more. I have offered this amendment in good faith, and in the name of liberty, in the name of this great Republic and all it stands for, by the memories of all the past, I trust, I hope, I pray, that it will be adopted, and that Liberty Enlightening the World will continue to shine for all mankind and be a beacon for freedom so long as this Republic shall endure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman withdraw his amendment? [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is trying to be facetious, but I sincerely trust he will not raise a point of order. If he stands for liberty, if he believes in republican institutions, if he glories in the greatness and the honor of this Republic, he surely will not object to the amendment. Of course I will not withdraw it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I have enjoyed the gentleman's speech very greatly. I am quite sure the Committee of the Whole House has, and having had the opportunity to make a speech and having made it so well, it was in the greatest good faith that I asked him if he withdrew his amendment, but he says not. It seems to me that having made the speech he ought to withdraw it. If he will not, however, I want to again express my admiration of his speech, including the peroration.

Mr. MANN. And the poetry.

Mr. CANNON. And the poetry, too; but if we must get down to cold facts about it, I must state there are $1,900,000 in the bill in connection with the Light-House Service for lights, and the Light-House Board has complete discretion in maintaining the service to light this particular light, as well as all others, and we made some inquiry about it. Somebody suggested, Why do not you keep that light burning in that great work that was given to us? Well, the reply come in that commerce does not need it; commerce is not benefited by it.

Mr. SULZER. And the Republican party does not need it.

Mr. CANNON. You know, we spend some money; we believe, of course, at times in the old flag and in an appropriation. We are spending some money at New York Harbor. We are making another channel there—40 or 45 feet, which is it to be, when complete?

Mr. BOWIE. Forty.

Mr. CANNON. The one we have now is 35 feet. You have to shift your defenses, your forts all about, you have got to build on Coney Island, you have got to mount your high-power guns, you have got to make your barracks and quarters, and from the peculiar formation of the harbor at New York the Long Island entrance and the other entrance, an almost untold amount of money is necessary for commerce, and you can hardly keep up with these appropriations. We have ten or fifteen thousand miles of coast—nearer 15,000 than 10,000—to light, and it is a hard matter to light it. We have, however, the best light system on earth on this great extended coast. Now, the United States has that statue—I believe that is the proper designation for it—and there it stands on public ground. I do not know that there is any disposition to move it to some place where it could be utilized, but if the gentleman can find a place where it can be utilized for light, why, then, let us move it and have the light burning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the present form of administration in New York needs a little light. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; and after all, that is a little thin, good naturedly coming from my friend. Anybody representing the city of New York who grows virtuous and suggests that anybody needs light had better look at home. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. LESSLER. May I correct the gentleman's statement?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LESSLER. I was informed that the light had been taken away from the Light-House Department and put under the War Department, and while I do not make speeches here the way my colleagues from New York do, I have been to the Secretary of War, and they are trying to find a place where they can find money enough to light it, because it is now under the authority of the War Department and not under the Light-House Department.

Mr. CANNON. Let that be as it may. As it now stands it is wholly useless continuing a light for commercial purposes—only $50,000 and a poem. New York Harbor and the great city of New York have enough to ask from the Treasury of the United States for absolutely necessary items, instead of $50,000 for this light, which would not aid commerce a particle. So, my dear friends, stick to the old flag. It is a good chance to make a speech. Stick to the poetry; but when you get down to cold business, let us keep the $50,000 to give to some work that needs it. Now, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words in reply to the gentleman from Illinois. He says that there is in this bill a large appropriation for light-houses. It is true the bill carries a general appropriation for light-houses. And, sir, I am willing to take the gentleman at his word. I trust he is sincere and is not begging the question. I am willing now to withdraw this amendment if the gentleman will agree to insert in this bill what I believe has always been in it before—that is, since 1886—a provision that the Light-House Board, or the War Department, whichever has authority in the matter, shall see to it that this statue of Liberty Enlightening the World is properly cared for and lighted, as has been done heretofore. That is all I want. That is all the people, who take a pride in this matter, desire. Will the gentleman consent to it?

Mr. CANNON. Now, let me say to my friend right there, there never has been a specific appropriation to keep this light burning in this statue.

Mr. SULZER. Well, then, that is all the more reason why it should be in now. Why should an irresponsible board have the right to say arbitrarily the torch of Liberty must be put out?

Mr. CANNON. Let me complete my statement. If it is necessary or proper for commerce, then there are nearly $2,000,000 available for that and other purposes. I do not want to assent to a legislative direction to keep that light burning. On the contrary, if the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of War exercised a discretion to spend $50,000 for keeping this light burning when it did not aid commerce one iota, I should be in favor of passing a resolution of censure upon such Secretary, because it would be an unwarranted waste of public money.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. The gentleman says this amendment carries $50,000. It is true the amendment says $50,000, but the gentleman fails to state what the amendment also says—"$50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary"—and I am willing to reduce it to meet the views of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is so in all matters of appropriation.

Mr. SULZER. If $50,000 is too much, the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Treasury can see to it that only enough is expended to light the statue properly, or I will make it five thousand or ten thousand dollars now. The gentleman from Illinois says commerce does not need this light. I differ from him. For the last fifteen years it has been a beacon and an aid to commerce. It is marked on every chart of New York Harbor. It is for commerce a light-house. It is looked for by every ship coming in or going out of the harbor, and it is just as essential to commerce as any other light-house in New York Bay. No shipping concern, no commercial body has asked to have the light extinguished. On the contrary, commerce demands that this light shall continue to shine.

Mr. LESSLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. LESSLER. I should like to know where you get your information about that.

Mr. SULZER. I get my information from the same source that you can if you look for it—the newspapers.

Mr. LESSLER. Well, I have looked it up—

Mr. SULZER. I get it from the daily newspapers of New York City. I get it from mariners who reside in New York. I get it from commercial bodies—

Mr. LESSLER. In your district?

Mr. SULZER. I get it from the pilot associations in New York City; consult these sources of information. This light, aside from any patriotic sentiment, is just as necessary as a light-house as any other light-house. There are half a dozen light-houses in New York Bay, and this is one of them, and it is just as important as the others. This appropriation, consequently, should be made, or there should be some provision in the bill directing the proper authority, whether it is the Light-House Board or the Secretary of War, to see to it that Liberty Enlightening the World is properly illuminated. That is all I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, and I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SULZER) there were—ayes 43, noes

Mr. CANNON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. CANNON and Mr. SULZER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 67.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hillsboro Inlet light station, Florida: For constructing a first-order light station at or near Hillsboro Inlet, east coast of Florida, $45,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said light station at a total cost not exceeding $90,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 12, insert:

"Oyster Bayou light station, Louisiana: For establishing a light-house at the mouth of Oyster Bayou, near the Louisiana coast on the Gulf of Mexico, $5,000.

"Kewaunee light station, Wisconsin: For the erection of a building for the keeper of the light-house, Kewaunee, Wis., $5,000."

Mr. CANNON. That provision carries out the law lately passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service: For pay of captains, lieutenants, captain of engineers, chief engineers and assistant engineers, for pay of a constructor, Revenue-Cutter Service, cadets, and pilots employed, and for rations for the same; for pay of petty officers, buglers, seamen, oilers, firemen, coal heavers, stewards, cooks, and boys, and for rations for the same; for fuel for vessels, and repairs and outfits for the same; ship chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; traveling expenses of officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; commutation of quarters; for protection of the seal fisheries in Bering Sea and the other waters of Alaska, and the interest of the Government on the seal islands and the sea-otter hunting grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; for enforcing the provisions of the acts relating to the anchorage of vessels in the ports of New York and Chicago, approved May 16, 1888, February 6, 1893, and March 3, 1899; and an act relating to the anchorage and movement of vessels in St. Marys River, approved March 6, 1896; for temporary leases and improvement of property for revenue-cutter purposes; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $1,240,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I see this appropriation for the Revenue-Cutter Service is a lump sum, $1,240,000, without being segregated in any way whatever. I call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the act of 1888, the sundry civil act, making appropriations for the year 1889, where it provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually submit to Congress a detailed statement of expenditures under said appropriation relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

Now, this appropriation is not made for different portions of the service. There is no division in the appropriation as to the amount which may be expended for officers or men, or for supplies or for any other expense. I would like to inquire from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he can refer the House to the annual report which has been submitted in compliance with the sundry civil act of 1888.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I know or have been able to ascertain, there has been no report made which complies with the provisions of the act the gentleman refers to. My recollection is that the subcommittee in the preparation of the bill asked the gentleman that appeared to be heard upon the estimates if such a report had been made, and my recollection is that he said that his predecessor had concluded that the report that had been made in the Book of Estimates, covering the appropriations for the last year and the estimates in detail for the coming year, complied with the law. In my judgment, I will say to the gentleman, it seems to me that it does not comply with the law; and that is all I can say about it. This appropriation is made in a lump sum, it is true, but it would be used for fuel, for crews, for pay of officers, etc., and all like provisions the necessities of the service require.

Mr. MANN. Well, I notice that in the appropriation bill, in a number of pages, we make appropriations for the Light-House Service and that there are specifications as to the various things in connection with that service; in other words, that the appropriation is segregated. Here are the expenses of the "keepers of the light-houses" under one head, "Expense of light vessels," "Repair of light-houses," "Expenses of buoys," "Expenses of fog signals," "Lights on rivers," and various other heads of that sort—segregated appropriations. Now, there is nothing of the sort in the Revenue-Cutter Service appropriation. Is there any way of ascertaining, so far as the gentleman knows, how this amount of money is actually expended?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say that the total estimate for this service is covered in Appendix S of the Book of Estimates. I can give the gentleman no further information than that. It is true that the appropriations for the light-houses and the Life-Saving Service are set out somewhat more fully than this appropriation; but it is also true, when you come to the pay of the Army and pay of the Navy and in many other branches of the service, large amounts are made in lump sums, and then their distribution is determined by the law as to the various officers and seamen, etc., and various officers, privates, etc., in the Army.

Mr. MANN. Well, will my colleague state whether the Army appropriation bill, like the one which passed through this House a few days ago, simply appropriates the total amount, making no segregation of the items; for instance, as to pay, the amount appropriated for the officers' branch of the service?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect. I think the item is quite a short one for pay of the Army. It certainly does not undertake to say so many generals, so many colonels, and so many majors. The truth is that much that is contained, I will say to the gentleman, in general appropriation bills touching the public service, where we are undertaking to give the details, that it amounts to nothing, except it gives more knowledge to the membership of the House as to how the money is expended. Our system at best, I was going to say, is a makeshift. That is hardly a proper term to apply to it. But while we undertake to follow out the statutes on matters of detail, it does not tell the one-hundredth—I was going to say the one-thousandth—part of the story as to the expenditures in detail.

I am not quite sure but that if we could enter upon a reform touching the appropriations we might adopt the English system. Many scores of volumes, if I recollect aright, cover their estimates, and the enacting clause that vitalizes the expenditures is very short. We have no such system of detail in estimating our expenditures as they have. I have no great pride in the manner in which we make our appropriations. The details are not uniform as to various branches of the service; and I apprehend that this appropriation appears as it is, without further detail, very largely because the precedents have been that way.

Mr. MANN. Now, if my colleague will permit me, he refers to Appendix S; but that only gives an estimate of something over $800,000, and considerably less than $900,000, while this appropriation is $1,240,000. I call my colleague's attention to this as a matter of information that I am seeking. In the sundry civil act of 1888 the same item in the same form relates to the Revenue-Cutter Service and to the Smithsonian Institution. The Smithsonian Institution makes a detailed report of expenditures, giving in detail in a large number of pages the number of the voucher, the amount, the purpose, and the person to whom the expenditure is made. Here is this Service that gets a lump sum for an appropriation and makes no report of the expenditures, gives no details or estimate covering the whole sum.

Mr. CANNON. I will state that Appendix S simply covers pay and does not cover repairs. It does not cover fuel and various other miscellaneous items to a great number, I have no doubt. I agree with the gentleman that under the law of 1888, in my judgment, it is the duty of those at the head of that service to submit a statement of expenditures in detail. I trust that, with this discussion, in the future it will cause a compliance with the law in making such statements.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the gentleman to another point in connection with the detailed statement with reference to Appendix S. The statute of 1889 provided that this estimate should be presented in detail, showing the number of officers and cadets. I would like to inquire of my colleague if he is able to find in Appendix S, or anywhere else in the Book of Estimates, any report in regard to the number of cadets.

Mr. CANNON. The only information I have is contained in this appendix. I believe on a hasty examination that the cadets are not mentioned. As a matter of fact, I will say that I do not know how many there are.

Mr. MANN. There are undoubtedly a number of cadets, and the statute provides that they shall submit in this report the number of cadets. Here is a detailed estimate purporting to set forth the amount required for the pay of the officers, but it does not mention cadets at all, although the statute requires it. There is no estimate for cadets, although they are paid out of this lump-sum appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of local appraisers' meetings: For defraying the necessary expenses of local appraisers at annual meetings for the purpose of securing uniformity in the appraisement of dutiable goods at different ports of entry, $1,200.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 57, after line 10, insert:

"On and after July 1, 1903, section 3637 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to include in the annual Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1904 and annually thereafter estimates specifying in detail the number and class of officers and employees of every grade and nature, with the rate of compensation to each, that may in his judgment be necessary to properly conduct the business of collecting the revenue from customs at each port of entry in the United States, together with an estimate of the amount required for contingent expenses at each of said ports and for such additional expenses of the service as can not be otherwise specifically provided for. In submitting the estimates herein required for the fiscal year 1904, it shall be clearly indicated in the case of all officers and employees whether any of them are additional to those authorized and employed during the fiscal year 1902, and whether in any case the salary proposed is an increase over or reduction under the compensation actually paid during the said fiscal year."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, and would like to hear what that is intended to accomplish.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that has received considerable thought by the Committee on Appropriations for some years. As the gentleman from Ohio knows, the expenditures in the custom-houses are now met in two ways: First, by a permanent law that appropriates for that service five and one-half million dollars annually, and appropriates also, for the same service, the income from fines and forfeitures resulting from infractions of the customs law. That permanent appropriation is not sufficient to meet the expenditures of the administration of the custom-houses, and it becomes necessary each year to appropriate in the deficiency bill a lump sum of two and one-half million dollars. The administration of the custom-houses is without any responsibility to Congress.

Salaries are fixed in accordance with the wish of the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinates, and are not equal, or are claimed not to be equal and just, as between the different custom-houses in the service. How this is I do not know. This amendment looks toward the correction of that method. It looks toward the requirement of an annual recurring responsibility to Congress. It places the customs service upon the same basis as all other services of the Government, as, for instance, the internal-revenue service. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury, before the beginning of the next fiscal year, to estimate in detail for the whole customs service, and requires him to show whether the estimate is an increase or a decrease of existing salary. At the present time Congress is utterly ignorant of the administrative details of the customs service. As the gentleman from Ohio well knows, we are appropriating now under permanent laws something over $100,000,000 a year.

There is no annually recurring responsibility to Congress. Congress loses sight of the appropriations, and there is not that care and supervision which, in my own personal judgment and in that of all the members of the Committee on Appropriations, ought to be exercised every year. Congress ought to know exactly where the public money goes, and this amendment is for the purpose of increasing the control of Congress over those expenditures. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] will sympathize with the general purpose of this amendment, and while I suppose some part of the amendment may be subject to a point of order, I trust the gentleman will not make it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the amendment struck me as a complete revolution in the mode of the transaction of this business. But if it has been studied and investigated by the Committee on Appropriations I have, of course, no disposition to put up offhand opinion against theirs. I did not make any point of order; I simply gave notice that I reserved the point and held it under advisement. I will make no point of order.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that this matter has been studied. There has been a special committee appointed upon the whole subject of annual appropriations, with the purpose of repealing as many as possible of the laws which make permanent annual appropriations and bringing back to the annual supervision of Congress the expenditures in all branches of the Government. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $7,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the provision on page 57 of the bill for the protection of salmon in Alaska I wish to address the House briefly. I am somewhat familiar with the subject. One of the great industries of Alaska is the salmon fisheries. There are more salmon canneries in Alaska than perhaps in all the rest of this country, or, for that matter, in the world. These canneries catch and can great numbers of salmon every season, and are rapidly exterminating them. The waters of Alaska at present teem with salmon of different varieties, but if the canning goes on and nothing is done to protect the fish they will be exterminated in a few years. There are, all told, I believe, five or six different varieties of salmon in Alaska, but the market, especially in the East and in Europe, demands the red salmon, and these are becoming scarce, because the red salmon will not go up a river to spawn, save a river having a lake at its head.

The other varieties will go up any stream. The salmon of Alaska are different in their lives and habits from the salmon in other parts of the world. They spawn but once, and no salmon that goes up a stream to spawn ever comes back again. Just so soon as the salmon spawns it dies. In other parts of the world this is not so. It is a characteristic only of the Alaskan salmon. After a young salmon is 8 or 9 months old it goes to sea, and returns to the place of its birth in seven, eight, or nine years to spawn. Then it dies.

The coast of Alaska is indented with innumerable bays, streams, and rivers, and on nearly all these streams cannery sites have been taken up by the salmon canneries. These canneries have recently gone into a great cannery trust, with a capital of $25,000,000. They are rapidly exterminating the salmon, especially the red salmon, and in twenty years from now, if this continues, I believe the red salmon of Alaska will be just as scarce as they are to-day in California or Oregon. In Alaska the salmon are sold to the canneries by the Indians for from 1 to 5 cents apiece. The same salmon in California bring 35 cents apiece, and in Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia from 15 to 25 cents apiece.

Mr. Chairman, something must be done by this Government to protect the salmon of Alaska. This is a question that sooner or later must be met and determined by Congress. I have twice visited Alaska, and I have made a careful study of this question, so that I know whereof I speak. If any gentleman here will take the trouble to read the reports which have been made to the Government, and which can be secured from the Fish Commission, he will find in them a verification of all that I say, and he will find furthermore that the Fish Commissioners have recommended over and over again stringent protection.

To-day I desire to call attention to this matter in an informal way, and to direct the notice of the House to a bill I introduced on the 23d day of last January for the protection and the culture of salmon in Alaska. At the present time there are a few canneries in Alaska that own hatcheries and propagate salmon. The Government also has established there about half a dozen hatcheries. But there is no protection unless you paid a fish warden to guard every stream. My bill provides that where a cannery, or an individual, shall establish at its or his own expense a hatchery for the purpose of propagating salmon, such cannery or individual shall have the exclusive right to fish within 1 mile of the mouth of that stream, with the exception that there is reserved to the Indians the right to fish for food.

I ask the Clerk to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9976) to encourage salmon culture in Alaska and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or persons who heretofore or hereafter may establish and maintain a hatchery for the artificial production of salmon in the district of Alaska shall be entitled to the exclusive right of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

SEC. 2. That when the average normal product of any stream on which a hatchery may be maintained shall have been taken within 1 mile of the mouth of said stream in any one year by any party or parties, then the remaining fish produced by said hatchery shall be the property of the owner or owners of said hatchery for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of said hatchery stream, and for a further distance of 4 miles in all directions in tide water it shall be unlawful for any party or parties to take fish of the kind propagated by the hatchery for whose protection this law is enacted.

SEC. 3. That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream, subject to the same conditions as are provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the provisions and immunities of this act shall apply to barren streams and lakes that shall have been stocked with fish from artificial hatcheries.

SEC. 5. That in case two or more persons shall maintain hatcheries on the same stream or stock barren lakes or streams, such persons shall be entitled to their proportionate number of adult fish so produced, and each party shall file a sworn statement of his or their output of young fry with the nearest United States commissioner each year.

SEC. 6. That native Indians may at all times take sufficient fish for food or for drying for winter use as food for themselves or families, and fishing with the rod shall be open and free for all persons.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant leases in accordance with the foregoing sections of this act, for a period not to exceed twenty years from the time the product of their hatcheries shall return, to all persons producing satisfactory proof of having maintained hatcheries on any of the streams of Alaska not producing, in a normal state, more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated by said hatchery; such lease subject to renewal at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That before any such lease shall be granted the party or parties making application therefor shall accompany such application with proof sufficient to establish the normal product of such stream; and no person shall be entitled to more than one hatchery lease or the privilege of stocking more than three barren lakes or streams and being protected in the product thereof: Corporations owning and operating canneries shall be entitled to one hatchery franchise for each cannery so operated, and no more. All hatcheries that may have been started and maintained on streams producing more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated prior to the passage of this act shall be entitled to all immunities of hatcheries established on streams producing not more than 10,000, as provided in this section.

Mr. SULZER. In brief, the bill provides that the people who raise the fish shall have the right to catch the fish. In this way the fish will be protected and never exterminated. Now, if that were done it would not cost this Government one dollar for the protection of the salmon. At present it costs the Government a great deal of money, and the law is not enforced, and cannot be. Men in Alaska thoroughly familiar with this question say that the money now spent is wasted.

The distances in Alaska are so great that it is absolutely impossible for one of the fish wardens, or a dozen of them, for that matter, to get around to all these streams in order to prevent the cannery people and the Indians from fishing within the limitations fixed by law.

The destruction and extermination of the fish and the game in Alaska is a crying shame. It must be stopped, and something ought to be done at once to stop it. My bill, I believe, will protect the salmon without expense to the Government, and it provides for the propagation of salmon for all time to come, and this great industry—one of the greatest industries to-day in Alaska, yielding every year a revenue of millions of dollars—would go on indefinitely, and the fish, instead of being exterminated, would continue to increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOX rose.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I was just about to state that the matter to which the gentleman from New York has referred is not one within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SULZER. Of course I understand that. All I wanted to do at this time, while considering this appropriation for fish wardens to protect the salmon, was to call the attention of the House to what is going on in Alaska, and also to the fact that I had introduced a bill which meets with the approval of the people of Alaska and of the canneries in Alaska, by which the salmon can be propagated and protected.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I was only about to say that this particular provision, which has suggested the discussion to the gentleman from New York is an appropriation for the payment of salaries and expenses of two officials who are appointed by virtue of the terms of a general law. The Committee on Appropriations had nothing to do with the subject, except to carry out the provisions of that law. Now, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say a word upon this bill or any of its provisions, but I was very much interested in the position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. It certainly is a very serious matter, the way that the waters and streams of Alaska are being denuded of salmon. There is no question as to the loss to the Government and the loss to the future food supply of this country in the manner in which the streams and inlets of Alaska are being denuded of the fine food fish of the salmon, but I do not agree at all with the position of the gentleman from New York that any new legislation, as far as preventive or remedial legislation is concerned, is necessary. I wish to call the fact to his attention that in the Fifty-fourth Congress there was a law passed which, in my judgment, was entirely adequate, if it was enforced, to protect the salmon fishery of Alaska. That law was passed upon the recommendation of one of the ablest experts upon the subject that had ever visited Alaska. It was full and complete in its provisions, and I wish to say that, in my judgment, the trouble with the fisheries of Alaska to-day and the reasons for the streams being denuded is the non-enforcement of the law. I read in report after report of the Secretary of the Interior that new legislation is required.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I concur in the conclusion that if the law was properly enforced in Alaska the salmon would be protected; at least to some extent, but it would cost this Government, in my judgment, a great deal of money each year to pay fish wardens to enforce the law in that vast Territory. The best way to protect the salmon fisheries is to give the men who establish hatcheries on the streams and propagate fish the exclusive right to catch those fish when they return after seven, or eight, or nine years. If that is done, they will enforce the law; they will enforce the law—they will guard their rights, protect the fish, and keep poachers and trespassers off with a shotgun if necessary. Now, sir, I believe if such a law were enacted by Congress it would solve this problem without putting the Government to a dollar's expense. That is the object of my bill.

Mr. KNOX. Upon that position I do not agree with the gentleman from New York. I wish to say, in my judgment, there is not a man who would have this privilege of establishing a hatchery in Alaska who would stand for a moment against the money that the great corporations that are to-day stripping that Territory of fish would give him. He would be bought off; he would be controlled. The matter would be entirely in the hands where it now rests—the hands of the great corporations now operating in Alaska. There is no remedy in this matter of the preservation of that great source of food supply for this country in that district in the future except the enforcement of the law. The salmon with which Alaska abounds are sufficient to afford a food supply to the United States through all future years if they are only preserved and guarded as they are in Scotland, England, and other countries, and as they should be in this country. If the salmon fisheries of Maine, of the Connecticut River, of the rivers upon the east coast of this country had been guarded and wisely preserved, we should have had salmon in those rivers to-day where they have entirely disappeared.

Now, what is the trouble? I read year after year in the report of the Secretary of the Interior of what is being done and the requests for more legislation. I undertake to say no more legislation is necessary, but to enforce the law. The governor of Alaska says he can have but one boat furnished him for the year. It is impossible that he should make his way into all the inlets and all the places where this fish-canning industry is carried on. A few more men properly authorized, a few more boats properly equipped to sail into the inlets, a few more men appointed by the United States upon whom the Government can rely and who would act upon their oaths and responsibility to the Government would be the remedy for what is now going on in the Territory of Alaska.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the pending amendment reported.

Mr. SULZER. No amendment is pending.

Mr. LACEY. Then I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 2, page 58, the following:
"And the further sum of $10,000, to be used for such purpose in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CANNON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, we have adequate law in Alaska for the protection of the fishing industry. The salmon fishery of Alaska is one of the most valuable things that this country now possesses. Those fisheries are what the Kennebec and Connecticut rivers were to the early settlers of the United States. It is due to posterity that we should not have repeated the history of the Kennebec and the Connecticut in the waters of Alaska. There is only one way to prevent the repetition of that dark chapter, and that is to move in time. And, remarkable as it may seem, unless the reports are all in error, the men who are more interested than any other people on earth in the preservation of this great industry, the men interested in the canneries, are the men who are most assiduously engaged in the destruction of these fish and in the annihilation of their industry.

Under the law there are two men appointed with one superintendent, and this appropriation of $7,000 furnishes two men to patrol a coast as extensive as that from Nova Scotia to Cuba. Along that enormous coast the fisheries and canneries are established, and they are carried on upon the principle that it is important to get the last fish this year, that if any of them escape they will reduce the dividends to the cannery company. Under the law it is provided that an ample supply of fish shall go upstream for spawning purposes. To prevent these fish from going up assures the destruction of the fisheries in the future. Weirs have been built across many of the streams. The law forbids the construction of these weirs. The law requires that the streams be kept open and no fishing done from Friday night until Sunday every week, giving an opportunity for a sufficient number of the spawning fish to pass up the stream. I am told that this law is disregarded. It takes agents to look after the enforcement of such a law.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LACEY. I yield.

Mr. LLOYD. Are there not six persons employed to look out for the enforcement of the law?

Mr. LACEY. I understand there are but two.

Mr. LLOYD. This appropriation of $7,000 provides for two, but there is an appropriation for four others, and I understand it is a part of their duty to see that this law is enforced; so that there are six persons instead of two; but notwithstanding that I most fully concur in what the gentleman says—that there are not enough persons for the purpose of enforcing that law.

I suppose the people of the United States have as little idea of the real value of the salmon fisheries of Alaska as about anything we possess in this country. I fully concur in the gentleman's idea that the country's attention ought to be called to the importance of enforcing the law and protecting the interests of our people in Alaska.

Another serious matter is the destruction of seal in Alaskan waters. The special agent of the Treasury Department, Mr. Adams, between September 23, 1895, and October 10, 1895, actually counted 22,054 dead seal pups, cows, and bulls found upon the rookeries of St. Paul Island alone, which had been wantonly killed or destroyed. In addition to this a large number of starving pups were found which could not survive. The gentleman from Iowa will please excuse me for taking his time.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, we want to do something more than call the attention of the country to it. We want to send some men there who will enforce the law. If you send but a few men without any boats, they have to apply to the cannery companies for transportation. When they get to the rivers they have to board with the packing companies. The tendency to become "color blind" is very great when a man is charged with the investigation of the man at whose table he is sitting. Special agents will not very earnestly enforce the law against the only men who give them the comforts and conveniences in their life along the coast.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. One of the duties prescribed by the law for the Revenue-Cutter Service is to enforce the law of Alaska. They are provided with boats there and have four or five of them up there.

Mr. LACEY. It is proposed to render the Revenue-Cutter Service eligible to the retired list and put them upon a similar standing as the Navy.

Mr. MANN. Do they look after this?

Mr. LACEY. I think that that is about the most useful work done by the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. MANN. I have not been able to find where they have done anything on this line.

Mr. LACEY. They have been very useful in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. In the seal fisheries they may have, but not as to the salmon fisheries.

Mr. LACEY. They have as to the seal fisheries, and also as to the salmon fisheries. They have proved useful in that direction. I will say that for the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. LLOYD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it not a fact that the Government officers themselves who have charge of this duty, with whom you have come in contact, have expressed the opinion that a great many persons, and those who are charged with the duty, are "color blind," as you suggest?

Mr. LACEY. If any members of the House seek light and will get the work issued by the Harriman expedition and read the chapters of that book as to the condition of the salmon fisheries in Alaska in the year 1899, they will be surprised and shocked at the worse than neglect this great industry has met with upon the part of those who are the proper ones to take care of it. The fishermen, instead of taking care of the fish and allowing enough of them to go up the rivers to furnish spawn for another year, try to catch them all in a single season, and when you make complaint to one of them he says that "the other cannery, at some other river, is catching all the fish, and if we do not catch all in sight our pack will be reduced in amount, and that company will be prosperous and we will fall behind."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LACEY. Now, in Oregon, they have salmon wheels, and they have been fishing furiously at the mouth of the Columbia River until the Chinook salmon, which was formerly never known in the Frazer River, has been compelled to seek other streams to go up, and now the Chinook salmon is occasionally found on the Frazer River, driven away by the fierce fishing at the mouth of the Columbia.

That noble river lies between two States, and it is controlled by each State to the middle of the stream. The fishermen, of course, all want to make a successful packing season. They are more interested in this year than next. Posterity has done nothing for them, and they say why should they be worrying about posterity. But dividends to-day are something that they can appreciate; and so they set wheels out in the stream, and the wheel catches the fish and kills the smaller ones as well as the large. This system, of course, is really a crime against nature as well as a crime against unborn generations. The California streams were once as full of fish as the Alaska streams are to-day; and as my friend from New York [Mr. SULZER] has said, the fish in California are practically exterminated, because they are prevented from going to the headwaters of the streams to spawn.

They deposit their eggs and the little fish come back to the sea and they stay there from five to seven years, we do not know how long. Experiments are being made to find out the length of their stay in the deep sea by tagging the young and turning them loose.

Mr. Chairman, you can send your two men to Alaska, armed with all the public authority of the law, and they will not find these things that are so constantly reported by private individuals. There is no use to go duck hunting with a brass band. You must send somebody there without the public indicia of authority—somebody that can go right into these camps, who do not have their names sent ahead, who will be able to see, and who will not have each stream prepared for them by the time they arrive there.

The Secretary of the Treasury ought to have a fund by which he can select trusty men who can go there secretly, who can visit these streams, apparently on their own account, and they will then see what the balance of mankind sees, and what the Government officials seem so unable to find when they get there. In short, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there should be some arrangement made by which the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, would be able to send men to ferret out these offenses committed against the laws of Alaska, and bring justice home to those who commit them. Self-interest ought to be sufficient, but that is not found to be so.

The cannery ship their workmen there in the spring of the year; the season is short, and they fish as fast as they can. They take the last fish they can catch in every stream and send the pack down in the fall, and they have no time or thought of the next season. Perhaps next year some one else will go in in the same locality and interfere with their fishing, and what is the use of saving fish for some one else? So it goes on from year to year. I was told the other day by a Government official that he thought that the salmon were not being destroyed in Alaska because the industry had shown the largest pack in the year 1901 ever known in the history of Alaska. I said to this gentleman that the year the buffalo were exterminated showed the largest killing of any year in their history. And so in Alaska, the enormous yield is only an evidence of the size of the business and of the tremendous efforts that that industry is making toward its own extermination.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, to that amendment I have reserved the point of order. This paragraph is to carry out existing law. By existing law two of these agents are authorized and this is to utilize them, and the amount of $7,000 is appropriated. This amendment seeks to appropriate $10,000 more to the same end not authorized by existing law.

Now, I do not think the $7,000 that we appropriate does any good. We only recommend it because the law authorizes it. I do not think this $10,000 will do any good either. It is a long way off, and, as the gentleman from Iowa I have no doubt well says, these two agents, or a half a dozen, get up there as the guests and associates of these fishermen. There is nobody there to watch them.

I do not think the special-agent service in Alaska, anywhere along the line of the public service, has ever done any good. Without speaking against any individual, I am under the impression that the proprietors have succeeded in swallowing without much greasing all the agents that are sent up there. [Laughter.] Now, I think it would be better, if the condition up there is as my friend from Iowa says, that the appropriate committee should report legislation to this House making it the duty of the Revenue-Cutter Service to patrol these fishing grounds. I suppose there are not more than four or five places where fishing is going on.

Mr. LACEY. There are over 100 places.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; the season is short, and if the Revenue-Cutter Service was utilized in patrolling this industry up there something might be accomplished; but it is just like throwing the money into the fire to appropriate it in this way, in my judgment. It does harm instead of good to send these men up there under the conditions the gentleman refers to. Therefore I am constrained, as this expenditure is not authorized by existing law, and the recommendation in the bill covers existing law, to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he understands that the amendment is exactly for the same purpose as that specified in the pending paragraph?

Mr. LACEY. One is under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to meet a certain purpose—namely, to pay two officials—and the amendment is in the discretion of the Secretary. In one the word "direction" is used and in the other the word "discretion."

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the point of the gentleman from Illinois, that the use of the word "discretion" makes the amendment contrary to existing law?

Mr. CANNON. My point is that the paragraph in the bill carries out existing law. I believe there is no dispute about that. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] whether that is not so?

Mr. LACEY. Undoubtedly; and I think the general provision of the act to which I have already referred, requiring the protection of these fisheries, is existing law. The Secretary of the Treasury is charged with the duty of attending to this protection. The present proposition is simply to furnish him money to carry out existing law.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; the existing law describes how it shall be enforced, namely, by the appointment of two agents; and this appropriation provides for the salaries and expenses of the agents authorized by law. Now, then, there is no law anywhere that supports the amendment offered by the gentleman. The law on the statute book is fully satisfied by the appropriation in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LACEY. Only to this extent. I have not before me the Alaska code, but it contains the provision to which I have referred the Chair; and I suggest that perhaps it would be well to let this matter go over, and not to press it at this time.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to this being passed over.

Mr. LACEY. It will not delay the bill. I think that perhaps when the Chair comes to examine the Alaska code he will come to the conclusion that this amendment is authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have an opportunity to examine the existing law, and therefore puts the request of the gentleman from Iowa that the pending paragraph with the amendment be passed over for the present.

Mr. LACEY. Until the Chair can have time to examine the Alaska code.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no objection. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection and administration of forest reserves: To meet the expenses of executing the provisions of the sundry civil act approved June 4, 1897, for the care and administration of the forest reserves, to meet the expenses of forest inspectors and assistants, superintendents, supervisors, surveyors, rangers, and for the employment of foresters and other emergency help in the prevention and extinguishment of forest fires, and for advertising dead and matured trees for sale within such reservations: Provided, That forest agents, superintendents, and supervisors, and other persons employed under this appropriation shall be selected by the Secretary of the Interior wholly with reference to their fitness and without regard for their political affiliations, and allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, $300,000: Provided further, That forest agents, superintendents, supervisors, and all other persons employed in connection with the administration and protection of forest reservations shall, in all ways that are practicable, aid in the enforcement of the laws of the State or Territory in which said forest reservation is situated in relation to the protection of fish and game.

Mr. NEEDHAM. I move to amend by inserting after the word "affiliations," in line 4, on page 64, the words "and must be actual bona fide residents of the State or Territory in which the service is to be performed."

Mr. CANNON. I make a point of order on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. NEEDHAM] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. NEEDHAM. The provision originating this forestry service was inserted in the sundry civil bill of 1897, and the same bill has been amended from year to year by inserting such provisions without objection, so far as I know. Now, the result of the present law has been that there have been sent out to the West a large number of nonresidents to administer the forestry service. Now, it is a reflection upon the people of the States and Territories of the West that officials of this character should be sent out there. We have abundant material in the Western States and Territories to care for this service, and it of right belongs to the people there. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will permit this amendment, which is in the line of local self-government, to be voted on. Our people think it is an imposition that persons from the East should be sent out there to administer this service.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the point of order for this reason if for no other: I can imagine that a condition might arise where it would be very important that somebody not living in the State or Territory should act for the preservation of the forests. Sometimes, I can conceive, it might be better to get away from the influence and local feeling. Such a provision as that offered now by way of amendment would put it out of the power of the Secretary of the Interior, even in a necessary case (if they are not all necessary), to appoint anyone an official for this service who did not reside in the State or Territory where the forests are situated.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. CANNON. I will if I can.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Has not all the legislation that we have had on this subject been contained from time to time in the sundry civil appropriation bills?

Mr. CANNON. For the protection of the forest reservations these appropriations are made. The establishment of forest reserves is under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In the opinion of the Chair the proposed amendment limits the discretion which the Secretary of the Interior now has, and is therefore a change of existing law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LANDIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 71. Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to restate the accounts of certain registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes;

S. 4306. An act for the relief of Edward Haines, John Haugland, Wallace L. Reed, W. D. Davis, Martin Monson, Johann Bottjer, and the legal representatives of J. P. Ferwerda, deceased;

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $250,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 71 by striking out in line 9 the words "two hundred and fifty" and insert the words "three hundred;" so as to read "$300,000."

Mr. SMALL. The effect of this amendment is to increase the appropriation for topographical surveys from $250,000 to $300,000. The work of the Geological Survey in making these topographic surveys and maps is perhaps more nearly related to the material progress of the country than any other work of the Government. The exploitation of our mineral resources, the development of our water power, and the examination of soils are dependent on it. The topographical surveys must necessarily precede all hydrographic work, all geological investigations, and the important work of the soil surveys, so necessary to the agricultural interests of the country. This service has grown from insignificant proportions until now it covers a very large section of the country. The policy originally adopted by the Geological Survey was to contribute an equal amount to such States as appropriated a similar amount for this important work. There appears from a letter by Director of the Geological Survey in the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations a statement to the effect that the following States have contributed these sums as an equal contribution for the purpose of this work:

New York .....	$22,500
Pennsylvania .....	25,000
Ohio .....	25,000
West Virginia .....	15,000
North Carolina .....	10,000
Maine .....	2,500
Alabama .....	1,000

Making a total of $101,000; so that of this appropriation of $250,000, $101,000 will be expended in order to meet the amount appropriated by these several seven States. Now, this additional appropriation is absolutely necessary in order to do the work in those States which have not heretofore cooperated with the United States Geological Survey, and unless it is provided it is estimated by the Director that there will be a diminution of the work to be done in these several cooperating States of at least 25 per cent, and the work will be curtailed in the other States of the Union which have not heretofore cooperated with the Geological Survey.

This amendment is offered in all seriousness, and we are of opinion that various members from different sections of the country have sufficient interest in the appropriation to induce them to vote for it. Perhaps the Committee on Appropriations would have given the increased amount if it had been discussed before them; but, relying simply upon the estimates which had been made, the committee in their wisdom thought proper not to increase the amount. We hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment, being of such great importance to the industrial development, the exploitation of our mineral resources, the hydrographic work, and the agricultural interests of the country, will receive the approval of the committee.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can be accused of asking that the work of the Committee on Appropriations, or that of any other committee having in charge one of the large appropriation bills, should ordinarily be changed by the House. That has not been my practice. But I do hope the members of this committee will consider this amendment and give it their support. If the Geological Survey's work is worth anything, it is worth doing well and according to the requirements and necessities of the country. I want to call the attention of members to the fact that this work is being done in the State of West Virginia in cooperation with the national survey. Our legislature has appropriated $30,000 for the work in that State alone, and, under the arrangement made with the national survey, one half of the expense of the work is paid by the State and the other half by the national survey.

The advantage of this arrangement can be very well seen and understood. Vast development is going on in that State. Thousands and millions of dollars are being invested in its coal fields every year. I am informed by Prof. I. C. White, State geologist of our State—a man who stands as high, possibly, as any other in this country in his profession—that it is almost a necessity that this work be done, and that this appropriation be made in order that it may be done. I admit that this survey is a continuing work, but I am sure that the common sense, sound, clear judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will dictate to him that it ought to be done in such way as to expedite and advance the development and progress in those States where development in the mining industries is so conspicuous, and where it is so important. There is no other item in this bill save and except one other, that is relative to it, that of the publication of the maps, to which I desire to make any amendment.

I would not make this objection, I would not ask this change. I would not support this amendment if I did not believe it meant a great deal to the development of my State, and that it is very important that it should be made. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this estimate was approved for $300,000 by the Secretary of the Interior. I want further to call attention to the fact that there was a deficiency of $15,000 in this branch of the work last year, and I want to say further to my friends that if this amendment is not incorporated and this sum is not increased, the estimate is that there will be $50,000 deficiency next year. Under these circumstances I appeal to my friend, the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON], to allow this amendment to be made, and if he will not, then good naturedly, recognizing that sometimes the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations cuts too deep, I ask the House to vote it, but I am sure, or at least I feel certain, that he will be willing to concede this much to those States that are so vitally interested in this survey.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, the very fact that there are eight States in the Union that are willing to appropriate money out of their own treasuries for the purpose of expediting the work of topographic surveys is of itself conclusive that these surveys are most urgently needed, and there is perhaps no branch of the Government work which needs to be extended so much as this. The fact is that geological surveys can not properly be made without topographic surveys. Almost all geological work is guess-work without topographic surveys.

The uses to which these topographic surveys can be put are enormous, not only in the studying of the geological formations of the ground, but also as indicating where railroads can be built; where, in my country, canals and ditches for irrigation purposes can be built, and how much territory can be covered by the same; and the uses to which these surveys can be put are most remarkable compared to what is ordinarily understood. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a meritorious amendment, and that it should be adopted.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that $101,000 has been appropriated by States to assist in this enterprise of securing a topographical survey of the country and assisting the geological department of the Government in doing this work. Now, if $101,000 is appropriated by the States, and the Government of the United States under its custom appropriates a like sum of $101,000 to be used in those States, that takes $101,000 from the general fund, so that the amount left to be expended in the States where no State appropriations have been made becomes very small; and if the appropriation remains as it now is the effect will be that the principal part of the work must be done in those States which have cooperated with the National Government. The greater number of States in the Union where topographic work is now being done are not cooperating with the National Government, and the result of that will be that the work in those States must cease, or the greater portion of it must cease, unless the appropriation is increased.

I believe it is the duty of this Congress to look into this matter and to advance this enterprise by making a greater appropriation so that we can extend these surveys not only in those States which are cooperating with the National Government, but in all the States of the country. There ought to be topographical surveys not only in the States where the work is being carried on, but the work ought to be extended to every State in the Union; and in order that that extension may be made and that these surveys may go on it is necessary that the appropriations be increased. If no States in the Union cooperated with the National Government, then the work would be diffused just as it has been; but as I have explained in the beginning of these remarks, there are eight States which cooperate, and the policy of the Government is to expend an amount equal to that appropriated by the States. I appreciate the fact that those States which are sufficiently concerned in the matter to appropriate their own money ought to have favor over those States that have not sufficient concern to make the appropriation; but it is also true that the National Government has the same interest in one part of its domain that it has in every other. If this service is good for the State of Ohio, it is good for every other State in this Union, and ought to be extended to all parts of the country. I am concerned, therefore, that this amendment be enacted into law.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The appropriation for this service for the current year is $950,000 in round numbers. This bill carries $1,000 more for the service than the appropriation for the current year; a large appropriation for geology, if you stop to think a minute. This is a growing service. That is true. It is a live service—no doubt about it. It is a hustling service—no doubt about that. It is true, now, that a portion of this money for topography is spent in States that make appropriations from the State treasuries, and my observation is that this Bureau is quite lively in suggesting to States that that is a wise thing to do. An employee of the Bureau goes out to the State legislature, and the beauties of topography are pictured in many colors. Sometimes the State legislature appropriates and sometimes it does not. In my State of Illinois the State did not catch on. I am not saying that you do not need topography in West Virginia and North Carolina and Colorado. You have had a good deal of it in Colorado. Now, we recommend the same amount for the coming year as there is for this year—$250,000 for topography—and between nine hundred and ten hundred thousand dollars for the whole service. Your committee thought that we had better leave something for posterity in topography.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that by reason of this policy indicated by the gentleman, that these States appropriate money for geological surveys, which requires that the Government should pay a certain part of the survey, that it leaves for the other States a very small amount, and thus it makes those States which make the appropriation get more of the work done, while those States which do not make the appropriation get less than should be made?

Mr. CANNON. A great many have been made in Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But Colorado has not made any appropriation corresponding to that which has been made by the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say to the gentleman that great large blocks of this money have been spent within her borders.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think any greater proportion than in other parts of the country.

Mr. CANNON. The truth is, in the few States which contribute the hustling surveyor from Washington met the hustling surveyor of the State, and they pooled their issues, and the legislature came down. That is about all.

Mr. DAYTON. Is this survey of no importance?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. DAYTON. Is it not important that they should be had in those States where they are absolutely needed and called for?

Mr. CANNON. Topography is ascertaining the lay of the country; how high the hills are, and all that kind of thing. It is map-making work. That is topography.

Mr. DAYTON. About these maps; the gentleman will certainly understand the point when I say that upon these maps depend the investment, in my State, of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars, because the lay of the coal can be estimated, the policy of running a branch line of railroad to get that coal can be estimated from them. And these maps, I want to say to the gentleman, in my judgment, are of greater value than all other Government publications put together, and it has been impossible for me to meet the demand for them.

Mr. CANNON. Well, after all, the coal ledge, as it grew and developed, is still in West Virginia, and has been there for many centuries, and it will still be there for many centuries. So far as saying that these maps are necessary or useful in building railroads, I would say they are not. Whenever a railroad company wants to build a railroad it puts on its own surveyors and locates its lines. It was the opinion of your committee that the great appropriation of this year, amounting to nearly a million dollars, was enough for this service, and therefore we make the recommendation that we do. Now, having said that much, I am willing to leave it to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman answer me one other question?

Mr. CANNON. If I can.

Mr. DAYTON. In your estimate you cut down the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior, did you not, $50,000?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, we have cut off $12,000,000 of estimates in making up this bill.

Mr. DAYTON. There was a deficiency for this work of $15,000 last year, was there not?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, my friend is mistaken there.

Mr. DAYTON. That is the statement made to me under authority by one who claims to know.

Mr. CANNON. I have got the memorandum, and I have confirmed it. There was no deficiency for topography, and we have no right to make one.

Mr. DAYTON. The work was delayed.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend you can spend five millions in West Virginia the coming year in making maps.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, that is too extreme a statement.

Mr. CANNON. If you should have men enough, one or two millions. So you could in all the States. I think that really we are making very good speed. Your committee came to the same opinion, and I am quite content that the Committee of the Whole House should dispose of the amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would like to make a suggestion right there, if the gentleman will permit me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That by reason of these eight States appropriating $101,000, the result is that the United States Treasury has got to spend a like amount in them, and that leaves only $150,000 to the other States, and does not put them in as good a position as they were in before.

Mr. CANNON. I would say to the gentleman that there is no law which requires the United States to spend dollar for dollar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that has been the policy of the Bureau.

Mr. CANNON. That is a matter of administration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no question but what that will be the policy.

Mr. CANNON. That is a matter of administration. It may be wise and it may be unwise. I did not shed any tears when the Illinois legislature did not make any appropriation for topography—not one. Yet they were urged very strongly to do so; but corn still grows in Illinois, and we still mine more coal than any State in the Union, except Pennsylvania.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the amount originally estimated for this work?

Mr. CANNON. Three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. NEWLANDS. To what amount has the committee cut the appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. We recommend $250,000, the same as the current year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And what work does that cover, may I ask?

Mr. CANNON. It covers everything that the Government will spend on topography. They can only have it spent as we recommend. If the committee adopt the amendment it will be increased by $50,000, to $300,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we may as well have a stand-up vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. The paragraph occurs on pages 57 and 58 for the protection of the salmon fisheries in Alaska under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. To this paragraph the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] offers the following amendment:

Add to line 2, page 58, the following:

"And the further sum of $10,000 to be used for such purpose, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

The Chair, on examining the existing law on the subject, finds it in section 4, chapter 387, which reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That to enforce the provisions of law herein, and such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may establish in pursuance thereof, he is authorized and directed to appoint 1 inspector of fisheries, at a salary $1,800 per annum, and 2 assistant inspectors, at a salary of $1,600 each per annum, and he will annually submit to Congress estimates to cover the salaries and actual traveling expenses of the officers hereby authorized and for such other expenditures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the law herein.

The Chair is inclined to the opinion that where the Secretary of the Treasury submits estimates for such other expenditures as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the law herein, then Congress should appropriate for such purposes. But, under existing law, Congress is not authorized to appropriate money to be expended within the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 1, page 58, by striking out the word "seven" and inserting "seventeen."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, line 1, strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "seventeen."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no estimate for that. This is all that the Secretary of the Treasury asks and all he is entitled to under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the law limits the amount to be appropriated.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, and then I am ready for a vote. Here is the law, and the Secretary of the Treasury makes his estimate and says he wants $7,000. This amendment seeks to give him $17,000. Under the law, in my judgment, he can not spend it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LACEY) there were—ayes 7, noes 24.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engraving and printing the geological maps of the United States, $70,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 72, line 12, by striking out the word "seventy" and inserting the words "one hundred."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I can save the gentleman some time. It seems to have been the sense of the House to increase by $50,000 the appropriation for topography. It would look as if it would follow as a logical sequence that we should increase the appropriation for making maps and outlines of survey. Otherwise, I guess the first appropriation would not be apt. In view of the action of the committee, I think this would follow.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman from Illinois has stated the situation correctly—one would necessarily follow the other.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $880,570.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting the totals I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 72, line 25, strike out "eight hundred and eighty" and insert "nine hundred and sixty;" so that it will read "$960,570."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Census Office: The unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1901, for salaries and necessary expenses for taking and compiling results of the Twelfth Census is hereby reappropriated and made available for continuing the work of taking the Twelfth Census, and for all expenses arising under and authorized by the act to provide for a permanent Census Office, approved March 6, 1902, including the purchase of necessary law books, books of reference and periodicals, and manuscripts: Provided, That estimates in detail for the expenses of the permanent Census Office for the fiscal year 1904 and annually thereafter shall be submitted in the regular Book of Estimates.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the committee I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 15, insert "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to cause to be sold as waste paper or destroyed the population schedules of the Eleventh and prior censuses of the United States. The population schedules of the Twelfth Census and all subsequent censuses shall likewise be sold or destroyed as soon as the results therein shall be tabulated and published."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of the General Grant National Park: For protection and improvement of the park, construction of fences and trails, and repairing and extension of roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,500.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improvement of Mount Rainier National Park: For protection and improvement of the park, construction of fences and trails, and repairing and extension of roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

Mr. CANNON. I reserve a point of order on this amendment, if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. CUSHMAN. The amendment which I have just offered seeks simply to make an appropriation for the only national park within the limits of the State of Washington. This national park was created by act of Congress in 1889. There is contained within the limits of this park some of the most beautiful natural scenery to be seen anywhere on the American continent. It is said by many who have visited it to far exceed some of the wonders of the Yellowstone National Park.

Since the time this national park was created there never has been a dollar expended by the Government for its improvement or protection. It seems to me that in a time when we are passing legislation of this kind to improve and beautify the other national parks of the United States it is perfectly fair and proper that we should make a small appropriation for the improvement and preservation of one of the most beautiful of all the national parks. It is situated in a climate far more salubrious than the Yellowstone National Park, and is far more easy of access. It contains one of the most beautiful single mountain peaks in the world, besides many other beauties too numerous to mention.

I have before me a copy of the act of Congress which created this park and set aside the land within its limits for the purpose of a park. It must be very manifest to everyone here that unless a reasonable amount of money be expended for the improvement of this park—for the creation of roads and trails, for such improvements as will make it possible for the pleasure seeker to find his way through this park—unless this is done the legislation which created the park will practically fail of the end that was in view when it was adopted.

I call the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that we ask in this connection only the modest sum of $10,000. Year after year I have sat in this House and witnessed appropriation after appropriation go through for the further improvement of the Yellowstone National Park, for the improvement of the national park in California, and for the improvement of other national parks in the United States. I now simply appeal to that spirit of fairness which exists in this House to grant that some portion of that money which to-day is being expended for the improvement of the national parks of the United States elsewhere may be expended in and upon the only national park within the boundaries of the State of Washington.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have here in the volume before me the act making the Mount Rainier district a national park. I do not raise any point of order, because it seems to me the proposed amendment is not subject to a point of order. But I do submit that it is not wise at this time, if ever (and I do not enter the domain of prophecy to say whether it will ever be wise), to commence improving this national park. I have never been in this park. I have seen it from afar. I understand that it is as much as a man's life is worth to undertake to go into it for any considerable distance.

I recollect that some little while ago I was greatly interested in reading a report of the escape of some good citizens who went upon a picnic excursion into that park. Mount Rainier is a great mountain. Many of you have seen it. But on looking at the act now before me making this a national park, I find that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company seems to own half of it.

Mr. CUSHMAN. They have released much of their lands there, and taken other lands in lieu thereof since the passage of the act creating the park.

Mr. CANNON. Entirely?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Very nearly.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I would like to know how "nearly," because "very nearly" might mean that a good many thousand acres are not yet released. And I would be glad to know how much the Northern Pacific Railroad sold before it took the new lands for the balance. And then I find another peculiar provision:

SEC. 5. That the mineral land laws of the United States are hereby extended to the lands lying within the said reserve and said park.

I do not know whether any mining is going on there.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Is the gentleman aware of the attitude of the Department of Interior in reference to this matter?

Mr. CANNON. I have just discovered this law extending the mineral land laws to that park. They are not extended to the Yellowstone Park or the Yosemite or the Sequoia. How much mining is there in this park?

Mr. CUSHMAN. There is not any mining going on within the limits of this park—that is, there is none to speak of. I think one or two little mineral prospects have been made within the limits of the park.

Now, as the gentleman seems to manifest such an interest in this subject, I may be pardoned for interrupting him for the purpose of adding somewhat to his stock of information. The gentleman says he has never been in the park; that he has seen it from afar. Well, I have been in the park and through it from circumference to center, from the lower valleys to the snowy summit of Mount Tacoma—and, by the way, this reminds me that the gentleman from Illinois has become confused regarding the name of the mountain and the name of the park. Mount Tacoma is the mountain situated in the Mount Rainier National Park! [Laughter.]

Now, then, the statement that it is as much as a man's life is worth to go for any considerable distance into this park is simply foolishness, and I do not conceive that the gentleman made that objection in any earnest sense. Man, woman, or child would be a great deal safer in that park day or night than they would be in some of the streets and alleys of the city of Chicago in the gentleman's own State of Illinois.

Now, then, referring to the gentleman's objection that the Northern Pacific Railway owns lands in the park. This is an error as far as the practical facts are concerned. The land grant of the Northern Pacific Railway, which was made years ago, gave them a large amount of land throughout that whole region. They originally owned, I believe, every alternate section within the limits of what is now the national park.

To the best of my recollection, the railroad company have released all or nearly all their holdings within this park and, under the law, selected other lands in lieu thereof. Had I had the faintest idea that any such objection as this would be made, I should have had a map or plat here showing the exact amount of land within the limits of the park now controlled by the railway company. But, as I said before, the company have released practically all their lands therein, and they are releasing the balance as rapidly as possible.

What earthly difference could such an objection make? The railway company had certain lands within these limits before the law was passed creating this park. If the ownership of these lands was any serious obstacle to the creation or improvement of this park, how did the act come to pass creating the park in the first place? It seems that the gentleman from Illinois has conjured up a fear that was not possessed by House at the time it passed the law creating this park. Do not make any mistake. I am not urging this appropriation for the Northern Pacific or any other railroad company. I am not standing on this floor as the representative of the railway company. And the fact is well known to all the people of my home that on this floor I represent the people of the State of Washington and not the corporate interests of any railway company.

The railroad feature that has crept into this case is nothing more than a "ghost." The only possible interest, near or remote, that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company could have in seeing this appropriation made to improve this park is that it would increase the tourist travel and thereby increase their business—and that is the very same interest they have in the Yellowstone National Park, for the improvement of which this committee has just voted an appropriation!

I have offered this amendment in response to the widespread and universal sentiment of all the people of the State of Washington, who desire to have the national park of their State improved and beautified, guarded and preserved as are the national parks of other States. There is not anything strange or supernatural about the fact that they should have a desire similar to the desires possessed by other people on a similar subject, is there?

Further than this, I am utterly unable to conceive why the mere fact that the mineral-land laws of the United States still exist within the limits of this park should be made the basis of an objection to the improvement of that park. Ever since the white man has lived in that region, ever since Lewis and Clarke explored that vast region, ever since Marcus Whitman dedicated that region to Christian civilization, those same lands have been subject to mining exploration and mineral location—but there has not anybody been mining therein. The mining laws being in force in that region simply gave all men the privilege of mining therein, but nobody has taken advantage of that opportunity, because there was no great mineral belt or mineral deposits within the limits of the park. Therefore it seems to me that the worthy chairman of the Appropriation Committee is conjuring up a matter for an excuse which, upon examination, seems to me to have no real merit in it.

I have neglected to state that a bill has already passed the Senate a day or two ago making an appropriation of $25,000 for the improvement of this same park. Now, then, I have by some sad experience in this line heretofore arrived at a realizing sense of how difficult it is to secure an amendment upon an appropriation bill which was not favored by the Appropriation Committee. Now, then, it seems to me that I am unusually modest in asking for the sum of $10,000, when the United States Senate has already, this very session of Congress, passed a bill making a specific appropriation of $25,000 for this very purpose.

A word more on this objection to making this appropriation because the mining laws are still in existence in this park. The Public Land Department in the United States, and the Department having cognizance of all mining matters in the United States, is the Department of the Interior. Therefore, this same Department has supervision of this land as a park and jurisdiction over any mining operations that might be carried on in the park under existing law. Therefore, if there was any impropriety in making an appropriation for a public or national park because the mining laws were in force in that park, the Secretary of the Interior would have been the very person who would have objected.

Now, as a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Interior not only has not objected to this appropriation being made, but he recommends that it be made. I read briefly from what the Secretary of the Interior said upon this subject in an official communication:

I have to state that the legislation contemplated—an appropriation for this park—is in line with the recommendations relative to the Mount Ranier National Park contained in my last annual report to the President of the operations of this Department, pages 132 and 133. I have the honor, therefore, to recommend that this amendment be incorporated in the sundry civil bill when it reaches the Senate and that it may receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

Now, if there had been any objection to the making of an appropriation of this kind by reason of the fact that the mineral laws of the United States extended to this domain, certainly the Secretary of the Interior, the man under whose jurisdiction the Land Department is conducted and mining locations are made, would have had knowledge of that fact and would have made it the basis of his objection; but he did not.

I certainly hope that the committee will grant us this most modest request.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to this fact: First, that no estimate or suggestion came from the Secretary of the Interior or any other official asking this appropriation. So far as I know, it makes its appearance for the first time in the Committee of the Whole. We have had no opportunity to examine it. The Secretary of the Interior did not think enough of it at this time to even go through the poor form of submitting an official estimate on this suggestion. The gentleman reads a communication from the Secretary, I suppose, in reply to the request of a Senator. What it may be worth I do not know. Who wrote the letter I do not know. Whether the Secretary of the Interior investigated it or not I do not know; but I do know that, in the present knowledge that we have of this park, how much of it is owned by the Northern Pacific Railway, how much of it has been taken up under the mineral-land law, without any investigation whatever or any estimate whatever, I do not believe it wise at this time to make this appropriation. I am ready for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken; and on a division called for by Mr. CUSHMAN there were—ayes 19, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Antietam battlefield: For repair and preservation of monuments, tablets, observation tower, roads, and fences, etc., made and constructed by the United States upon public land within the limits of the Antietam battlefield, near Sharpsburg, Md., $1,500.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 6, page 93, add the following:

"For the purpose of constructing a macadamized road from the town of Sharpsburg, Washington County, Md., over the battlefield of Antietam, and over Burnside's Bridge to the Connecticut Monument on said battlefield, upon and along the present county road between said points, $10,000: Provided, however, That the county commissioners of said Washington County, in the State of Maryland, shall first convey and confirm said roadway to the United States by a good and sufficient title, approved by the Attorney-General of the United States. The expenditure of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be made under the direction and supervision of the Quartermaster-General in conformity to the general plan of improvement of the national cemetery and battlefield of Antietam."

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PEARRE. I do not understand the gentleman makes the point of order now.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I reserve it.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply embodies an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of constructing a road on the battlefield of Antietam between the town of Sharpsburg, in Washington County, Md., and the Connecticut monument, or the monument erected to the courage and valor of the Eleventh Connecticut Regiment in the battle of Antietam, which is just beyond the Burnside Bridge, at which point this regiment and other regiments of the Federal Army showed great gallantry.

The general plan of improving the battlefield of Antietam is not a new one, and it has been the unbroken practice of the Congress of the United States to make appropriations not only for the purpose of marking distinct and distinguished points on that battlefield, but for the purpose of building roadways, not only roadways to the adjoining national cemetery of Antietam, but also for the purpose of building roadways along the battle lines of the various regiments which participated in that battle. If need be, Mr. Chairman, I can go back for several years and show the legislation on this subject. At the first session of the Fifty-second Congress an appropriation was made

For the purpose of surveying, locating, and preserving the lines of battle of the Army of the Potomac and of the Army of Northern Virginia at Antietam, and for marking the same, and for locating and marking the positions of each of the 43 different commands of the Regular Army engaged in the battle of Antietam, and for the purchase of sites for tablets for the marking of such positions as follows.

Later on, in the Fifty-third Congress, at its third session, there was an appropriation in these words:

Battlefield of Antietam: For completing the work of locating, preserving, and marking the lines of battle at Antietam, and for properly marking with tablets, each bearing a brief historical legend, compiled without praise and without censure, the positions occupied by the several commands of the armies of the Potomac and of Northern Virginia on that field.

And I will direct the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the following language:

And for opening and improving avenues along the positions occupied by troops upon those lines, and for fencing the same, $9,421, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Going on later we find in the Fifty-fourth Congress, at its first session, in the sundry civil bill, the following:

Battlefield of Antietam: For completing the work of locating, preserving, and marking the positions of troops and lines of battle of the Union and Confederate armies at Antietam and the closely related battles at Harpers Ferry, South Mountain, Crampton's Gap, and Shepherdstown, the said lines and positions to be marked with cast-iron tablets, each bearing a brief historical legend compiled without praise and without censure; for improvement of roads owned by the United States at Antietam; for monuments of cannon balls and bases therefor to mark the localities where six general officers were killed; for completing the observatory towers; for guideposts; for preparing and publishing maps indicating the movements and positions of troops engaged in the battles and in the Antietam campaign; and for services and materials incidental to the foregoing, $17,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

But even prior to that time, Mr. Chairman, in the sundry civil bill approved March 3, 1893, under the head of "Battle lines and sites for tablets at Antietam," the following language occurs:

For continuing the work of surveying, locating, and preserving lines of battle of the Army of the Potomac and of the Army of Northern Virginia at Antietam, and for locating and marking the positions of the 43 different commands of the Regular Army engaged in the battle of Antietam, and for purchase of sites for tablets for marking the same, and for the purchase of roadway to tablets, as follows:

For the purchase of 50 additional tablets, and transporting and setting up same; purchase of 50 additional sites for tablets; salaries of board, including office rent, hire of vehicles, and mileage, and for the condemnation of the land and acquiring title of the same, and for the purchase of land for roadway from a point on the Sharpsburg and Hagerstown turnpike to a point on the Sharpsburg and Boonsboro turnpike (said land is known as the Bloody Lane or Sunken Road), and for repairing and fencing in said roadway, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to supply at Antietam such number of cannon and cannon balls as his judgment may approve and which can be spared for the purpose of marking the positions of the different commands engaged in the battle of Antietam.

It therefore appears very clearly to my mind, Mr. Chairman, and I respectfully submit that it will appear to the mind of the chairman, that this is a public work or object now in progress, and that it can not with reason be held that the point of order against this appropriation can be sustained. It is the purpose of the Government of the United States not only to maintain its national cemetery at Antietam, but it is the clearly defined and distinctly declared purpose and object of the Government of the United States to maintain that battlefield of Antietam, to establish the points of interest by tablets, and to lead to those tablets and other points of interest by roadways over land which has been purchased by the Government of the United States and improved by appropriations voted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a part of the general system.

Mr. PEARRE. It is a part of the general system, and it is only in carrying out the object of this general system that this amendment is offered. It is, therefore, entirely germane to the purpose of the section to which it is offered and in line with the general policy of the Government in carrying out this public work or object now in progress.

Why, sir, I have here a map, if the gentleman from Illinois desires to see it, showing a number of roads through this battlefield, not leading directly and distinctly to the gates of the cemetery itself, which is a national cemetery, but a number of roads purchased by the Government, improved by the Government, maintained by the Government, and for the maintenance of which this appropriation bill itself in this section and under this head contains appropriations, as will be seen on page 93, under the head of "Antietam battlefield."

For repair and preservation of monuments, tablets, observation tower, roads, etc.

Now, here is a plat furnished by the War Department, showing the improvements on the battlefield of Antietam, and showing not only the Bloody Lane, running from the Sharpsburg and Boonsboro pike to the Sharpsburg and Hagerstown pike, which has been purchased and improved by the Government and still continues to be maintained by the Government, but that a whole system of roads here in no way directly connected with the cemetery improvement or maintenance has been purchased and maintained and is now maintained by the Government of the United States.

Now, with reference to this particular improvement, Mr. Chairman, this bill covers an appropriation for the improvement between what points? Between the town of Sharpsburg and the Connecticut monument, which is just on the opposite side of Antietam, and which was erected to the valor of the Eleventh Connecticut Regiment, at the Burnside bridge, where perhaps the hottest fight on this battlefield took place. At the Burnside bridge the valor of American soldiery perhaps reached the pinnacle of greatest achievement in the history of the armies of the United States.

There, sir, arrayed against a hostile and well-disciplined foe, manning the approach to that bridge by artillery and infantry, raking with musketry fire from the rising ground beyond, and with field pieces loaded to the muzzle with grape and canister that made the entrance to this bridge an almost impregnable position, the Eleventh Connecticut, shoulder to shoulder with the brave and magnificent Second Maryland Regiment, made an unsuccessful and futile effort to carry that bridge under orders of superior officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman may have five minutes more, if he desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Maryland may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PEARRE. These two devoted regiments, sir, following the flag of their country and inspired by patriotic determination, went eight abreast into that perfect cul-de-sac of death. The passage was so narrow, the means of approach so constricted, that only eight men could reach the bridge abreast. Baring their breasts to the leaden blast of battle, these dashing regiments filled that bridge to the very top of its parapets with the dead heroes and patriots of the Union.

With that effort failed as magnificent a military charge as was ever made in the annals of military history, equaling in every respect, aye, sir, excelling in many respects, the daring and futile dash of the six hundred at Balaklava. This charge and its gallantry was seconded by the call for two other regiments, the Fifty-first Pennsylvania and the Fifty-first New York. These regiments went into that action and with one magnificent shouting sweep they carried what appeared from a military strategic point of view to be an absolutely impregnable position and planted the colors of their country on the hills beyond in the wake of the retreat of Toombs and Longstreet's steady and well-disciplined troops.

Now, sir, the Sixth district of Maryland, a State which, although a border State in that great struggle, furnished 62,000 loyal troops for the defense of the Government, its contention and its flag, asks the mere miserable pittance at the hands of this committee of this $10,000 to mark the spot of this unequalled and unexampled valor of these patriots of the land. It seems to me, sir, if I may be permitted to say so, that this is no place to interpose a point of order upon whose sharp point every objectionable or what is considered unnecessary suggestion of legislation is thrown out.

Why, sir, what do we ask to-day compared with what has been done for the other great national cemeteries and battlefields? Eighty-four thousand seven hundred and thirty-one dollars have been expended at Antietam in the exploitation of the national park and the battlefield. Chickamauga, without the provision of $100,000 carried in this bill, has already received from the largesse of the Government $1,138,000. Gettysburg National Park has already received, without the appropriation of $75,000 carried in this bill, $457,922. Shiloh National Park has already received $300,000, without the $50,000 in this bill. And Vicksburg has received $130,000, without the appropriation for it which is covered in this bill. Seventy-eight thousand as compared with a million or more; seventy-eight thousand compared with a hundred and thirty thousand, which is the smallest amount which has been expended upon any other battlefield or national park.

I confidently, sir, submit that this appropriation will be a monument not only to the generosity but to the patriotism of the House. This battlefield was more pregnant, perhaps, of great results, or the objects achieved by this battle were perhaps more pregnant with great results, than any other battle of the war of the rebellion. In that fight McClellan hurled Lee back in disaster across the Potomac, and kept him within the Southland, kept him away from an attack on the North. And more than that, sir, it enabled Abraham Lincoln to carry out that great purpose and broad-hearted humanity with which his heart and mind had been inspired—namely, the declaration of emancipation—which depended upon that victory, and by that victory was consummated by Lincoln the next day, to the glory of the Republican party, of Abraham Lincoln, and the lasting and unending benefit of the human race.

I respectfully submit, sir, that this appropriation should pass. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the question here is a mere question of parliamentary law. If I were called upon to vote for the further improvement of the battlefield of Antietam, I certainly would vote for such an improvement. I believe the Government can well afford to spend more money on that beautiful field, where one of the most signal battles of the war was fought. But no such question arises. It happened for the time being, in the momentary absence of the chairman of the committee, that the duty fell upon me to reserve the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, a point of order which I now make.

The Government unquestionably has established a memorial battlefield by the banks of Antietam River. The citations submitted to the Chair by the gentleman from Maryland show that that work is completed. The appropriations are for the completion of the park at Antietam. In two of the acts which the gentleman read the appropriation is phrased to be for the completion of the battlefield.

The proposition here is not to repair and preserve the completed park, but the proposition is to acquire a road outside of the park from the county commissioners of the county in which the village of Sharpsburg is situated, and to improve that as a road leading to the battlefield itself. Now, that is not a project that is either in progress or that is authorized by any existing law.

The proposition is too plain to admit of any argument. If my memory serves me correctly, it is the same proposition, if not in the same words, in substance that has been submitted by the gentleman from Maryland before, and has been ruled to be out of order by the chairman presiding over the committee. I think there is no essential distinction, if there is any distinction at all, between the cases where the Chair has ruled adversely and the case now presented to the Chair for decision. I submit that very clearly, by the plainest principles of parliamentary law, this amendment is not in order.

MR. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, and I will not trench upon the time of the committee very far, there is one matter I neglected to call to the attention of the committee, and that is that I have here an agreement from the county commissioners of Washington County, in Maryland, and also from the town council of Sharpsburg, agreeing to convey to the Government the necessary land, so that there would be no cost to the Government outside of the mere improvement.

I should also say that in January, 1901, I secured from the depot quartermaster's office the following indorsement:

[Second indorsement.]

DEPOT QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1901.

Respectfully returned to the Quartermaster-General of the Army.
The construction of a road on or near the present highway, from the intersection of Mill street and the Antietam National Cemetery roadway in the town of Sharpsburg, Md., to and beyond the Burnside bridge to the monument of the Eleventh Connecticut Infantry on the Antietam battlefield, would be of great utility, the only approach to this bridge being by a very rough, badly kept road, very dusty in summer and almost impassable over portions of it in winter. The cost of the construction of a road similar to the avenues which have been built by the United States on the battlefield will be between $8,000 and $10,000.

I therefore recommend that the road be built, and if an appropriation be made for the purpose the amount should be $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

T. E. TRUE,

Major and Quartermaster, U. S. A., Depot Quartermaster.

I should also add to that that in a report accompanying the submission of a bill introduced by Senator McCOMAS in the Senate of the United States, General Ludington, Quartermaster-General, sent to the committee of the Senate the following communication:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 4, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 4099, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, "To provide for a macadamized roadway from the town of Sharpsburg, Md., to the Connecticut monument on the battlefield of Antietam," and to respectfully report that the existing road, the improvement of which is contemplated by this bill, is not one of those selected for improvement by the "Antietam battlefield commissioners," but is practically a street or county road from the town of Sharpsburg, Md., intersecting the Government roadway to the Antietam National Cemetery, about a quarter of a mile west of that cemetery, and extending in a southeasterly direction about a mile to the Burnside Bridge and Connecticut monument. So far as the interests of the Antietam National Cemetery are concerned the improvement of the road in question is not deemed necessary; it is, however, very rough, hilly, and in places too narrow to permit the passage of teams with safety. Its improvement would undoubtedly be of advantage in affording a shorter and more direct approach to the Burnside Bridge and Connecticut monument, two of the principal points of interest to visitors, than by the usual route via Rodman avenue. Its construction as an addition to the roadways heretofore constructed under the direction of the "Antietam battlefield commissioners" is recommended, provided a good and sufficient title thereto be first secured to the United States.

Respectfully,

M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster-General, U. S. A.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, March 5, 1902.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to the accompanying report of the Quartermaster-General of the Army, dated March 4 instant.

WM. CAREY SANGER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

MR. MOODY of Massachusetts. Has that bill passed the Senate?
MR. PEARRE. No, sir.

MR. MOODY of Massachusetts. If it passes the Senate it will go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and when it is reported from the committee I should vote in favor of it, but that is not the proposition before the Chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. During the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress a similar amendment to this was offered, and the Chair made the following ruling: "The building of a road on land not owned by the Government is not in continuation of Government work on a battlefield."

The Chair, following that precedent, will sustain the point of order.

MR. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, MR. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 18123, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

THOMAS F. TOBY AND ELIAS H. PARSONS.

MR. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent for the return to the committee for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8544) to place Elias H. Parsons on the retired list of the United States Army; also House bill 6458, for the relief of Thomas F. Toby.

MR. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New Jersey the object of returning these bills.

MR. PARKER. The reports were premature and the committee ask that they be returned.

MR. SULZER. What does the gentleman mean by premature?

MR. PARKER. There is a mistake in them.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MINORITY REPORT—CHINESE-EXCLUSION BILL.

MR. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to file a substitute for House bill 15031, the Chinese-exclusion bill, with a report.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to file on behalf of the minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs a substitute for House bill 15031, being the Chinese-exclusion bill, with a report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

OKLAHOMA, ARIZONA, AND NEW MEXICO.

MR. KNOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a privileged report to accompany House bill 12543, to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

THE SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee on Territories, reports a bill for the admission of certain Territories, which will be ordered printed, and referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

JOHN RUSSELL BARTLETT.

The bill (S. 4222) authorizing the appointment of John Russell Bartlett, a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. HANNA March 25, 1902, and read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4222) authorizing the appointment of John Russell Bartlett, a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following letter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 12, 1902.

SIR: Referring to the bill (S. 4222) "authorizing the appointment of John Russell Bartlett, a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy," and to the committee's request, in its letter of the 3d instant, for the Department's views upon the same, I have the honor to state that Captain Bartlett was, in July, 1897, then being 53 years and 9 months of age, found by a retiring board to be incapacitated for active service by reason of neurasthenia. Without questioning the correctness at that time of this finding, it appears to be a fact that ever since a few months after his retirement he has been an unusually good specimen of health and of physical and mental activity. During the recent war he was, under the statute authorizing active service by retired officers, put on active duty and did valuable and efficient work. Under the recent statute authorizing the employment of retired officers on active duty he is rendering efficient service and has been a member of several important boards; and it is believed that he is capable of performing active duty, as other officers of the same age.

As will be seen from the official transcript of Captain Bartlett's record of service, together with a more detailed supplementary statement, transmitted herewith, he has served with credit throughout his career in the Navy. The Bureau of Navigation, having been called upon by the Department for report and recommendation in the premises, submits the following, among other things, in his behalf:

"Captain Bartlett's services during the war with Spain were of great value to the Government. In addition to acting as Chief Intelligence Officer, he was assigned to the conduct of the coast signal service and the auxiliary naval force, which systems he completely reorganized upon an efficient working basis. He was also placed in control of the fund appropriated for the maintenance of secret agents in Spain.

"In view of his arduous and capable services during the period of the Spanish war and his previous excellent record, the Bureau approves of the legislation proposed by Senate bill 4222 and recommends its enactment."

The Department would have preferred a measure providing for the restoration of this officer to the active list after examination as to his physical and other qualifications to perform active duty, such as was introduced in the House of Representatives during the second session of the Fifty-sixth Congress (H. R. 13889), the grade and place to which he should be restored to be determined, after recommendation with regard thereto, by the examining board. Inasmuch, however, as the present measure has been introduced instead of the one above referred to, the Department approves the favorable recommendation of the Bureau of Navigation.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

HON. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. LODGE. That is enough; I do not care for any further reading of the report. I should like to ask whether it would not be proper to put in this bill, what is, I think, usually put in bills of this character, a proviso that there shall be no claim for back pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. It gives a little back pay.

Mr. HALE. Let the Secretary read the last clause of the bill.

The appointment to date from March 3, 1899.

The appointment to date from March 3, 1899.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill may be amended in the way suggested by the Senator from Missouri.

Hasselman, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

BONDS OF OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

The bill (S. 1107) limiting the liability of sureties on bonds of officers of the Navy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN March 25, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1107) limiting the liability of sureties on bonds of officers of the Navy, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following report of the Paymaster-General:

[Report of the Paymaster-General, pp. 12, 13.]

TERMINATION ON LIABILITY FOR PAY OFFICERS' BONDS.

Under existing laws no provision is made for the termination of liability of a surety on a public bond. As pay officers of the Navy are required to give new bonds from time to time during terms of office, there is pressing need of legislation to relieve them of unusual hardship with regard to the payment of annual premiums, as it frequently happens that these officers are compelled or prefer to take out their bonds with corporate surety companies.

The act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 800), has been construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, in his decision on liability of sureties on bonds of officers, rendered June 17, 1899 (Comp. Dec., vol. 91)—

"To cover the entire term of office, and if the officer is not appointed for any fixed term specified in the statute creating the office or in the commission appointing the officer, the liability continues during the whole period of service of the officer under said commission, whether short or long."

The law as now interpreted is thus manifestly unfair, not only to the sureties who serve on such bonds—for the reason that they are never released from the liability originally incurred—but also to the officers who are required to qualify under such bonds.

Furthermore, the proviso of the same act—which reads: "Hereafter every officer whose duty it is to take and approve official bonds shall cause all such bonds to be renewed every four years after their dates, but he may require such bonds to be renewed or strengthened oftener if he deems such action necessary"—has been also construed by the Comptroller of the Treasury in the same decision as follows:

"Under these provisions the Comptroller has held that such renewal bonds are cumulative and do not release from continuing liability the sureties on the original bond, notwithstanding the fact that new satisfactory bonds are forwarded as required by the provisions of this act, where the renewal bond is given during the same term of office."

Hence it appears that, as the new bonds do not operate to release the sureties on the first bonds, pay officers may be required to pay annual premiums on all the bonds furnished by corporate surety companies filed by them during their continuance in any one grade.

In the case of the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland v. George W. Simpson, paymaster, United States Navy, for the recovery of premium on bond filed prior to the acceptance of a new bond by the Secretary of the Navy, upon which premium had also been paid, the supreme court of the District of Columbia rendered a decision in favor of the plaintiff. Paymaster Simpson is required, therefore, to pay annual premium on two bonds, each for the full amount required by law.

In view of the foregoing, I recommend that Congress be asked to pass a measure providing for the execution of new bonds and release of sureties similar to the bills H. R. 8500 and S. 3209, introduced during the last session of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VOID ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 642) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This seems to be a rather far-reaching bill. According to the Calendar there has been a report made to accompany the bill, but I do not find such a report on my file.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the report read, and then I think I shall ask to have the bill go over.

Mr. CULLOM and Mr. HALE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well. Then I ask that the bill go over and that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection, and the bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The report submitted by Mr. NELSON on March 25, 1902, is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 642) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee recommend the following amendments:

After the word "office," line 11, page 2, insert the words "or adjudged invalid by the final decision of a court."

After the word "made," line 18, same page, add the word "and," and between the words "which" and "is," same page and same line, insert the word "portion."

In line 23, same page, strike out the words "money under this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "such excess payment."

Strike out the whole of the second proviso on page 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the provisions of this act as to said excess payment shall not apply to any land within the primary or granted limits of any railroad land grant or part thereof, where the railroad for which said grant was made has actually been constructed adjacent to and coterminous with such land."

The proposed amendments, while they do not change the purport of the bill, render the object thereof more plain.

A bill of similar intent was introduced in the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses. A favorable report was made upon it on each occasion, and certain amendments were suggested in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses. These amendments have been incorporated in the measure now under discussion. In the Fifty-sixth Congress it passed the Senate. The report made upon the measure in the Fifty-sixth Congress reproduced the reports made in the prior Congresses, and as this report prints at length the recommendations of the Secretaries of the Interior, made when the bill was submitted to the Department during the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses, it is herewith reprinted.

[Senate Report No. 6, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 386):

The Committee on Public Lands, having had Senate bill 386 under consideration, beg leave to report it back with the recommendation that it do pass.

A bill similar to this was introduced in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and was reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands, with certain amendments. These amendments have been incorporated in this bill.

The following is the report made upon the measure at the last Congress, which is hereby adopted as the report of your committee on the pending bill:

[Senate Report No. 1493, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.]

In lines 31 and 32, page 2, printed bill, strike out the words, "original entryman thereof, or to his legal representatives," and insert the following in lieu thereof: "Entryman who made the excess payment or to his executor or administrator for the benefit of the estate."

In line 35, page 2, printed bill, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three" in lieu thereof.

In line 37, page 2, printed bill, after the word "act," strike out the period and insert a semicolon; also insert the following words: "And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any land lying within the primary limits of any railroad land grant where the road to which said grant was made has been constructed."

The bill as amended reads as follows:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands.'"

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands,' approved June 16, 1880, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber-culture or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled or relinquished on account of conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his legal representatives, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases where parties, as preemptors or homestead claimants, have paid double-minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid, but only to the entryman who made the excess payment or to his executor or administrator for the benefit of the estate: Provided, That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of three years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any land lying within the primary limits of any railroad land grant where the road to which said grant was made has been constructed."

This bill amends section 2 of the act of June 16, 1880, in several particulars, but the most important amendment herein proposed is that extending to homestead and preemption settlers who paid double-minimum price for lands within the limits of railroad land grants that have been forfeited since such payment the relief hitherto granted by said section 2 of the act of June 16, 1880, to purchasers who paid such double-minimum price for land afterwards found not to be within the limits of railroad land grants.

The relief proposed by this amendment is limited to homestead and preemption settlers, while the present law affords relief to all purchasers who paid double-minimum price for lands not within railroad limits.

The proposed amendment is clearly in accord with the principle upon which the act of 1880 is based, namely, that it is unjust for the Government to retain double-minimum price for lands not benefited by the construction of a railroad within the prescribed distance of the lands for which such enhanced price was required and paid. If the act of 1880 (the present law) is just and equitable, the pending bill is equally so, and the Government should not further delay repayment of money for which the consideration contemplated by all parties at the time of purchase has not been given.

The enhanced price, $2.50 per acre, was charged for lands in railroad grant limits, partly to compensate the Government for land granted to the railroad, and because of the expected enhancement of the value of the lands by reason of the construction of a railroad near such lands. No other reason existed for requiring settlers to pay the advanced price; but the Government, by withdrawing the land grants from the railroad companies through acts declaring forfeiture, prevented construction of the roads and thereby deprived settlers of the benefits for which they paid such increased price. This fact has received legislative recognition in the laws reducing the price of unsold lands in such forfeited grants to the former price of $1.25 per acre. A like reduction should be made in behalf of those who settled on lands within such limits prior to the declaration of forfeiture. This can only be done by repayment of the excess paid by such settlers, for which repayment provision is made in the pending bill.

It should be noted that this bill provides a limitation upon all claims arising under section 2 of the act of 1880, requiring all claims under said section as amended to be presented within three years from the time the same shall have accrued, or within three years after the passage of the bill herewith reported.

We submit herewith letters from the honorable Secretary of the Interior and from the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office commending the bill as an equitable and just measure:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 6, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference of your committee, on March 11, 1898, for views, of a copy of S. 747, entitled 'A bill to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands."'

In response to the reference, I inclose herewith a copy of the report on the bill by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under date of the 5th instant.

The object of the bill is to return the double minimum excess paid by settlers under the preemption and homestead laws on lands in limits of railroad grants where the grants were forfeited for failure to construct the roads, and the Commissioner has expressed the opinion that, while its enactment into law would involve the expenditure of a considerable amount of money, the contemplated action is equitable and just.

The Commissioner is also of the opinion that the bill should be amended so as to allow repayment to the heirs and assigns of the entryman, and has suggested an amendment so that the bill shall not affect lands in the primary limits of any railroad land grant where such land-grant railroad has been constructed.

I concur in the views and suggestions of the Commissioner.
Very respectfully,

C. N. BLISS, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS, Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference from the Department for early report in duplicate, of Senate bill 747, 'To amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands."'

The act sought to be amended is the act of June 16, 1880, second section (21 Stats., 287).

The proposed amendment is as follows, the amended portions being placed in brackets and the portions stricken out being underscored:

SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber culture or desert land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for [or relinquished on account of] conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns [legal representatives], the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same, upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment to all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases where parties [as preemptors or homestead claimants] have paid double minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant [or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands], the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid to the purchaser thereof or to his heirs or assigns [but only to the original entryman thereof, or to his legal representatives: Provided, That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of two years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act].

This act proposes to reimburse settlers under the preemption and homestead laws who have paid double minimum price for their lands for the reason that the same were within the limits of a railway land grant, in cases where the land grant was forfeited by reason of failure to construct that portion of the road in aid of which such grant was made, and which is adjacent to and coterminous with said lands.

The policy of charging double minimum for lands within the limits of a railway land grant was undoubtedly entered upon and carried out on the theory that the building of the road would enhance the value of the adjacent lands above that of lands not so situated, and that the purchaser and entryman, by reason of proximity to a line of railway, would derive benefits therefrom such as would justify the Government in charging him the increased price for the land. The advance from minimum to double minimum also reimbursed the Government for the land donated to the railroad company so far as the sections reserved from the donation were disposed of for cash.

By act of Congress approved September 29, 1890, the forfeiture to the United States of all lands theretofore granted to any State or corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such road not completed was declared; and such lands were declared to be a part of the public domain, except the right of way and station grounds theretofore granted.

Prior to such forfeiture, however, the lands within the limits of those grants adjacent and coterminous to the portions not constructed were disposed of at the double minimum price.

There seems to be no good reason why entrymen who paid the double minimum price under such conditions should not be reimbursed for the excess of payment and commissions. They entered and purchased these lands with the expectation that the railway would be constructed, and that therefore the lands would be worth the enhanced price paid, and the Government demanded the enhanced price on the theory that the lands would be more valuable by reason of railway construction, and that the Government would be to that extent reimbursed for the lands granted to the railways.

The roads were not constructed, therefore the entryman received no benefit by reason of his settlement within land-grant limits, and a forfeiture having been declared of the lands granted to the railway, the Government received back the granted lands, and therefore could not reasonably demand the enhanced price on the theory of reimbursement for the granting of the alternate sections.

It is true that these entries are in the nature of completed contracts, but they are contracts which the entryman entered into with the understanding that there was to be a railway constructed, and that he was to be benefited thereby.

Attention is called to the amendment in lines 15 and 16, page 2, of the printed bill, in striking out the words "heirs or assigns" and inserting in lieu thereof "legal representatives." It is not clear on what theory the change in phraseology was made.

The cases affected by this provision are those in which all claim and title to the land in the entryman or grantees under him are extinguished. Transfers in such cases are often made before the cancellation of the entry.

I am of opinion that the right to repayment should follow whatever claim or title there may be to the land under the entry for the protection of grantees under the entryman. When repayment is made it should be made to the party having whatever claim or title to the land vested in the entryman.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the bill should be so amended as to allow repayment to the assigns of the entryman, and I see no good reason why it should not be paid to the heirs if the heirs are the owners under the entryman of his claim and title to the land.

I would also call attention to the fact that in some cases where forfeitures have been declared because of the failure of the grantee to construct its road the limits of the unconstructed road overlap the primary limits of other grants over which roads have been constructed, and where such is the case the reason for the increase in price still exists and no repayment should be made.

I would therefore suggest that the bill be amended as follows:

"Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to affect any land lying within the primary limits of any railway land grant where the road to which such grant was made has been constructed."

While the enactment of the proposed law would involve the expenditure of a considerable amount of money, I believe that the action contemplated is equitable and just.

Very respectfully,

BINGER HERMANN,
Commissioner.

Hon. C. N. BLISS,
Secretary of the Interior.

During the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress a similar bill was before this committee and was favorably reported in Report No. 114, which is herewith submitted as a part of this report.

It is noteworthy that similar bills have been approved by Secretaries of the Interior of the last three Administrations.

[Senate Report No. 99, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session.]

Mr. McBRIDE, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 36):

The Committee on Public Lands, having had Senate bill 36 under consideration, and having duly considered the same, report it back with amendments and recommend its passage. The bill as amended reads as follows:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands.'"

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands,' approved June 16, 1880, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber culture or desert land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled or relinquished on account of conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his legal representatives, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases where parties, as preemptors or homestead claimants, have paid double minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid, but only to the original entryman thereof, or to his legal representatives: Provided, That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of two years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act."

During the second session of the Fifty-third Congress a similar bill was before this committee and was favorably reported in Report No. 171, which is herewith submitted as a part of this report:

"The Committee on Public Lands having had the bill (S. 67) under consideration, and duly considered the same, report it back with amendments and recommend its passage. The bill as amended reads as follows:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands.'"

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands,' approved June 16, 1880, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all cases where homestead or timber culture or desert land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and in all cases where parties as preemptors or homestead claimants have paid double-minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid, but only to the original entryman thereof, or to his heirs or personal representatives: Provided, That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior of the United States within the period of two years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act.

"Section 2 of the act of June 16, 1880, is as follows:

"SEC. 2. In all cases where homestead or timber-culture or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase money, and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and in all cases where parties have paid double-minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid to the purchaser thereof, or to his heirs or assigns."

"It will be seen that by the bill reported by the committee it is proposed to amend the act so as to limit the repayment of $1.25 an acre to parties who have paid double-minimum price to homestead and preemption claimants, and also to provide a limitation as to all claims arising under the act. These provisions are restrictions and limitations of the original act.

"The retention of the act is provided for in the following words: 'Or which is within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands,' which, taken in connection with the contract, will entitle homestead and preemption claimants who have paid $2.50 per acre for lands within the limits of forfeited railroad grants to have $1.25 per acre refunded to them.

"It requires but few words to show that the principles of common honesty require the passage of this bill.

"The Government made grants of alternate sections of the public lands to aid in the construction of railroads. In order that there should be no loss to the Treasury and the purchasers of the lands not granted within the limits of the several grants should pay for the benefits to be derived by them from the construction of the railroads to be aided by the several grants, the price of the sections not granted was increased to $2.50 an acre.

"The Government afterwards forfeited the grants, reduced the price of the forfeited lands and of the even sections within the limits of the grants to $1.25. The railroads were not built. The consideration for the increased price of the lands failed. Purchasers within the limits of railroad grants were required to pay double the price that purchasers are now required to pay for adjacent lands where the grants have been forfeited.

"The Government retains the additional $1.25 an acre notwithstanding it has taken back its grants and prevented the construction of the roads. There is not a court of equity in a civilized country which would not grant relief under similar circumstances between private parties.

"Annexed hereto will be found letters from Secretaries of the Interior and Commissioners of the General Land Office concerning the measure."

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 14, 1893.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on Senate bill No. 67, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands,'" which was referred to this Department with request that the committee be furnished with its views thereon.

The effect of the amendment is to allow repayments in all cases where double minimum price was charged for lands within the limits of a railroad grant which has been or shall be forfeited by reason of the failure of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad adjacent to and coterminous with such land.

The amendment is, in my opinion, just and proper.
Very respectfully,

Hon. JAMES H. BERRY,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference of 22d instant from Hon. John M. Reynolds, Assistant Secretary, of Senate bill No. 67, entitled "A bill to amend an act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880, submitted by Hon. JAMES H. BERRY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and referred to me as above for report in duplicate.

The second section of the act of June 16, 1880 (25 Stat. L., 287), provides for repayment of the excess paid on lands that have been sold as double-minimum land at $2.50 per acre, and are afterwards found to have been outside of any railroad grant, and therefore subject to sale at $1.25 per acre.

This bill proposes to extend the right of repayment of excess over $1.25 per acre to entrymen whose entries are found to be "within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands." A limitation clause not contained in the original act of June 16, 1880, is added, providing, "That no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior * * * within * * * two years from the date when such claim shall accrue, or from the date of the approval of this act."

As the law now stands, entrymen who paid double-minimum rate for land within granted railroad limits which were afterwards declared forfeited are held to be not entitled to repayment of double-minimum excess, while those who made such entries subsequent to the passage of the forfeiture act are entitled to such repayment.

This bill will place the earlier entryman on an equal footing with the later in respect to repayment of double minimum excess. I see no objection to its passage.

The bill is herewith returned.
Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 15, 1893.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, giving a statement of the amount of appropriation likely to become necessary in the event of the passage of Senate bill No. 67, as requested by your letter of October 16, 1893.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH,
Secretary.

Hon. J. H. BERRY,
Chairman of Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1893.

SIR: In response to your inquiry, I have to advise you that on February 25, 1892, this office, in reporting on a bill (H. R. 346) which proposed to repay to those persons who had paid the double minimum price for lands within the limits of grants for railroads which had thereafter been forfeited, made an estimate of the amount that would probably be required to satisfy claims opposite the portion of the Northern Pacific road which was declared forfeited by the act of September 29, 1890, and, taking that as a basis, estimated, roughly, the whole cost to the Government, in the event the bill became a law, at $1,500,000.

The estimated cost given for claimants opposite the Northern Pacific forfeited line was given as $200,000. A hurried examination of the records has now been made and it is found that $265,200 will probably be required.

This, in my opinion, does not change the general estimate given at $1,500,000.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 30, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from the Department for report, of a letter from the Hon. J. H. BERRY, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, referring to Senate bill No. 67, a report on which was submitted on August 28, 1893, and asking the amount of appropriation likely to become necessary in the event of the passage of said bill.

In reply, I have to advise you that to determine accurately the amount which would be required to satisfy claims under said bill, should it become a law, would require an examination of the lands lying opposite the forfeited portions of all land-grant railroads, and in the present condition of the clerical force of this office would require several months' time. The amount of the cost, however, has been estimated, and was given in my report of September 22, 1893, on Senate bill 617, "for the relief of purchasers from the United States of lands in the even-numbered sections within the forfeited portions of railroad grants," as $1,500,000, if said bill 617 should be amended as suggested, which would have made the amount of appropriation necessary practically the same as would be required should bill 67 become a law.

It is proper to say, in this connection, that while this office recommended the passage of Senate bill 67, and had on two previous occasions recommended the passage of similar bills, Senate bill 622, report of January 30, 1892, and House bill 340, report of February 25, 1892, after further and more careful consideration it reached a different conclusion, and recommended that Senate bill 617, aforesaid, be not passed.

Mr. Berry's letter is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., June 17, 1890.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference, of Senate bill 3797, providing that in all cases where parties have paid double-minimum price for land on account of any grant of land to aid in the construction of railroads, and such grant has been forfeited because of failure to construct such railroad, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall be repaid to the purchaser thereof, or to the heirs or assigns.

I approve of the provisions of the bill.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by your reference, of Senate bill No. 3797, from the Hon. P. B. Plumb, chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate, for report thereon in duplicate.

After a careful examination of the bill, I approve of its provisions, and it should become a law.

This bill is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

LEWIS A. GROFF,
Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 19, 1892.

SIR: I am in receipt, by reference from you, of Senate bill No. 622, entitled "A bill to amend 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands.'"

I transmit the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on said bill.

The effect of the amendment is to place upon an equal footing a class of persons, a portion of whom have paid double-minimum price and a portion of whom have paid single-minimum price for the same class of lands.

In my opinion, the provision in the bill limiting the time in which a claim may be presented is wise and proper.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE,
Secretary.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 30, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt, by reference of the 19th instant, from Hon. George Chandler, First Assistant Secretary, of Senate bill No. 622, entitled "A bill to amend 'An act for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase money, and commissions paid on void entries of public lands,'" approved June 16, 1880, submitted by Hon. J. N. Dolph, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and referred to me as above for report in duplicate.

The second section of the act of June 16, 1880, provides for repayment of the excess paid on lands that have been sold as double-minimum lands at $2.50 per acre and are afterwards found to have been outside of any railroad grant, and therefore salable at $1.25 per acre.

This bill proposes to extend the right of repayment of excess over $1.25 per acre to entrymen whose entries are found to be "within the limits of any portion of a grant which has been heretofore or which shall hereafter be forfeited by reason of any failure upon the part of the grantee to construct that portion of the railroad, in aid of which such grant was made, which is adjacent to and coterminous with such lands."

A limitation clause, not contained in the original act of June 16, 1880, is added, providing "that no claim for any money under this act shall be allowed unless the same is duly made and presented to the Department of the Interior * * * within * * * two years from the date when such claim shall accrue or from the date of the approval of this act."

As the law now stands, entrymen who paid double-minimum rates for lands within granted railroad limits, which were afterwards declared forfeited, are held to be not entitled to repayment of double-minimum excess, while those who made such entries subsequent to the passage of the forfeiture act are entitled to such repayment.

This bill will place the early entryman on an equal footing with the later in respect to repayment of double-minimum excess. I see no objection to its passage.

The bill is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

THOS. H. CARTER,
Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

ELLEN J. CLARK.

The bill (S. 1643) granting an increase of pension to Ellen J. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, after the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry;" and in line 9, after the word "receiving," to insert "and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said Henry W. Clark until he reaches the age of 16 years;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen J. Clark, widow of Henry W. Clark, late of Company K, Third Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said Henry W. Clark until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY KING.

The bill (H. R. 7811) granting a pension to Mary King was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary King, dependent mother of Michael King, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BONA FIDE SETTLERS IN FOREST RESERVES.

The bill (H. R. 3084) for the relief of bona fide settlers in forest reserves was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "period," to insert:

The benefits of this act shall extend to bona fide claims already received by the local land offices after the statutory period, and for which patents have not issued, provided the settlers have complied with the provisions of the law except as to the time of filing their claims.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That where a claimant under the settlement laws of the United States within the limits of a forest reserve created under the provisions of section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," has failed, by reason of ignorance of the proclamation of the President, or of the filing of the township plat of survey, or from unavoidable accident or conditions, or from misunderstanding of the law, to place his claim of record within the statutory period, such claimant may be permitted within a period of two years from and after the passage of this act to file his claim in the proper United States land office and receive patent therefor upon showing due compliance with the law under which the claim is asserted, notwithstanding the reservation, provided that he made bona fide settlement upon the land claimed prior to the date of the proclamation establishing the forest reserve and maintained continuous residence thereon for the requisite period. The benefits of this act shall extend to bona fide claims already received by the local land offices after the statutory period, and for which patents have not issued, provided the settlers have complied with the provisions of the law except as to the time of filing their claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GAMBLE March 26, 1902, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3084) for the relief of bona fide settlers in forest reserves, having had the same under consideration, agree to report it back with the recommendation that the same do pass with the following amendment:

After the word "period," line —, on page 2, add the following:

"The benefits of this act shall extend to bona fide claims already received by the local land offices after the statutory period, and for which patents have not issued, provided the settlers have complied with the provisions of the law, except as to the time of filing their claims."

The passage of this bill is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. A bill identical in its provisions, being Senate bill 2306, passed the Senate on the 30th day of January, 1902, except only as to amendments hereinafter referred to, by which it was sought to make the provisions of the bill more plain and to place a limitation of two years upon the right granted by the bill. Your committee is informed, since the introduction and passage of the measure, that a number of settlers upon the Black Hills Forest Reserve had placed their claims of record with the local land office and proof in support thereof had been submitted and received. It was held subsequently by the General Land Office that under the operation of the act of March 3, 1891, these filings should not have been received by the local land office, and their further adjudication has been suspended and they are now held awaiting the action of the pending measure. It is thought by your committee that the original bill did not cover these cases and that it should be made applicable to them as well as to those who have not yet placed their claims of record with the local land office. Your committee submits and adopts as a part of its report the report of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, accompanying this bill.

"This bill was introduced upon recommendation of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office to afford relief to a class of worthy settlers who had established their homes upon various forest reserves in advance of the date of the establishment of such reservations, but who, from different causes, have been prevented from perfecting their titles. This subject is considered by the Commissioner in his last annual report to the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, at pages 137, 138, and 139. The present bill in the form in which it was introduced is set forth on page 139 of the Commissioner's report and recommended by the Commissioner for the consideration of Congress.

"Various forest reserves have been created throughout the Western States by Presidential proclamations pursuant to the act of March 3, 1891. That act protected the right of actual bona fide settlers upon territory that might be set aside for forest reserves, provided settlement in such cases should have been made prior to the date of the creation of the reserve; but permitted no settlements to be made after the proclamation of the President.

"The territory appropriated for these various forest reserves had been in many instances open to settlement for several years. The timber in such reservations is found uniformly growing upon the mountains, while the gulches and narrow valleys are generally devoid of timber. These valleys are commonly fertile and present desirable opportunities to settlers. In these valleys hundreds of settlers had established their homes prior to the dates of the creation of forest reserves.

"In many localities the lands were unsurveyed at the time of the creation of the forest reservations so that settlers had had no opportunity to make their entries at the land office. Later the Government surveys were had and the usual plats filed in the various land offices.

"The general law provides that settlers upon the public lands shall make their homestead entries at the district land office within three months after the filing of the plats of the official survey in the land office of the district in which the lands are situated. The uniform interpretation of this provision of the law by the Department has been that the failure upon the part of the settler to make his entry at the land office during the period of three months after the filing of the official plat did not work a forfeiture of his claim; that the only effect of such failure was to subject the settler to a possible adverse claim of some other settler who might seek to appropriate the same land, and that as against the Government the original settler could make his entry at any time subsequent to the three months' period with the same effect as though his entry had been offered within that period.

"There appears to have been a general impression among the settlers within the boundaries of forest reservations that these same rules would apply to their settlements, and that they could make their entries at the land offices as well after the expiration of the three months' period from the date of the filing of the official plats, provided that no adverse settlement should be made upon their lands. For this reason many bona fide settlers did not offer their filings until after the period of three months had expired. Many other settlers received no notice of the filing of the official plats, and had no knowledge of such filing until after the three months' period had expired. Others were prevented from making their entries within the three months' period by other unavoidable accidents.

"As a rule these are old-time settlers, many of them having made their homes upon their claims for from fifteen to twenty years, having made valuable improvements upon them. And these improvements are, practically, all that they possess, representing the labor and accumulation of years. They were not able to make their entries during the years referred to from the fact that the Government surveys had not yet been extended over their lands. When the surveys were in fact completed they failed to offer their entries within the period of three months thereafter by reason of the conditions herein referred to.

"After the three months' period had expired such settlers in large numbers presented their entries at the local land offices. The honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, when such cases were presented, held that the filings could not be made, upon the ground that the Presidential proclamation establishing the forest reserves amounted to an appropriation of the lands adverse to the settlers, and that, as a matter of legal interpretation, the settlers would be left in the same position as though another settler had subsequently appropriated his lands. Upon appeal, the honorable Secretary of the Interior has placed the same interpretation upon the existing law. The officials of the Interior Department have, therefore, considered that the relief can be given to these settlers only by act of Congress. They, however, consider that relief should be given these settlers and cordially recommend this legislation.

"This bill is designed to relieve a most worthy class of settlers, whose cases come entirely within the spirit of our settlement laws. By reason of conditions for which they are not justly responsible, they have been deprived of an opportunity to enter their lands. In many instances these are the pioneer settlers who have braved the dangers and hardships of life upon our frontiers to establish a home for themselves and their families. It would be in the nature of a public as well as a private calamity to deprive them of their homes.

"The committee recommends two slight amendments for the purpose of more clearly expressing the purposes of the act and in order to place a limitation upon the time in which the settlers referred to must complete their entries:

"After the word 'accident,' in line 10, page 1 of the bill, insert 'or conditions, or from misunderstanding of the law;' and after the word 'permitted,' in line 11, page 1, insert 'within a period of two years from and after the passage of this act.'

"The committee recommends that the bill as amended be passed."

[Extract from the report of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, 1901, pp. 137, 138, and 139.]

BONA FIDE SETTLERS ON FOREST RESERVES.

In the creation of forest reserves under section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, the lands within the boundaries described are all reserved, subject to any claim existing adverse to the United States. In each proclamation is placed the following excepting clause:

"Excepting from the force and effect of this proclamation all lands which may have been, prior to the date hereof, embraced in any legal entry or covered by any lawful filing duly of record in the proper United States land office, or upon which any valid settlement has been made pursuant to law, and the statutory period within which to make entry or filing of record has not expired: Provided, That this exception shall not continue to apply to any particular tract of land unless the entryman, settler, or claimant continues to comply with the law under which the entry, filing, or settlement was made.

"Warning is hereby expressly given to all persons not to make settlement upon the tract of land reserved by this proclamation."

Where settlers within the limits of the reserves make their filings of record within three months after the date of settlement, in the case of surveyed lands, and within three months after the date of filing the township plat in the local land office, in the case of unsurveyed lands, there is no difficulty in the matter of the completion of their claims, for the reason that they have complied with the provisions of the act of May 14, 1890, enacted to protect settlers from adverse claimants. But there is a class of claimants who, from ignorance, carelessness, and one reason or another, have failed to observe the requirements of the act of 1890, and their claims are, therefore, rejected because of the existence of the forest reserve, which has intervened to cut off their undisputed claim to lands upon which they may have settled. In many of these cases it is a real hardship upon the claimants, for the reason that they have in good faith settled upon lands which were vacant and open to settlement at the time of their location, and upon which they have spent years of labor, improvement, and cultivation, and for which they could obtain title but for the existence of the forest reservation.

These cases coming up on appeal for adjudication, the Department has uniformly decided that the parties having failed to observe due diligence in getting their claims of record within the statutory period, as required by the excepting clause of the proclamation, they must fail for the reason that the forest reserve is to be considered as an adverse claim within the meaning of the act of May 14, 1890.

In the recent case of Joshua Smith, decided August 5, 1901, the Department, in passing upon this subject, stated:

In this case there is no individual adverse claimant, but the Government, by its Chief Executive, has claimed all the land within the boundaries of said reservation for a specific purpose, excepting only the lands coming within the above category; and the Executive order, reserving the land for a specific public purpose, must be held to be at least as effective upon the claim of the settlers as would be the adverse claim of one who wished the land for his own use.

It has also been held that, in view of the plain terms of the proclamation creating a reservation, a claimant who fails to assert his claim within the statutory period can get no relief through the Executive authority.

While it is doubtless true that many fraudulent claims are intentionally initiated in forest reserves, particularly with the prospect in view of obtaining the valuable right of the selection of other lands in lieu of lands relinquished in forest reserves, it is also true that there are honest settlers who have devoted years of toil and hardship to the establishment of homes, whose claims have been embraced in forest reserves unknown to them, and who, through ignorance or a misunderstanding of the requirements of the law, or of inability to obtain information promptly in remote localities, have failed to get their claims of record within the required period. These people ought not to be allowed to suffer because of the necessarily strict construction of the proclamations creating the reserves, and some relief should be afforded them.

In view of the fact that all claims within forest reserves can be carefully investigated under such regulations as the Department sees fit to require, prior to the final adjudication of the same, all cases where there is any attempt at fraud, either in the assertion of a settlement subsequent to the creation of the reservation or in evading other requirements of the settlement law, can readily be detected and the claims rejected; and likewise it can be ascertained to the satisfaction of the Department what claims are, in fact, bona fide and just.

With this view of the matter, and for the purpose of relieving deserving bona fide settlers within forest reserves, whose claims are barred by reason of the creation of the reservation, as above set forth, I respectfully suggest the following proposed legislation for their relief, and recommend that it be presented to Congress for consideration, viz:

A bill for the relief of bona fide settlers in forest reserves.

Be it enacted, etc., That where a claimant under the settlement laws of the United States, within the limits of a forest reserve created under the provisions of section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws and for other purposes," has failed by reason of ignorance of the proclamation of the President, or of the filing of the township plat of surveys, or from unavoidable accident, to place his claim of record within the statutory period, such claimant may be permitted to file his claim in the proper United States land office and receive patent therefor upon showing due compliance with the law under which the claim is asserted, notwithstanding the reservation, provided that he made bona fide settlement upon the land claimed prior to the date of the proclamation establishing the forest reserve and maintained continuous residence thereon for the requisite period.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE OF SOUTH DAKOTA IN CERTAIN LANDS.

The bill (S. 4450) confirming in the State of South Dakota title to a section of land heretofore granted to said State was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the title of the State of South Dakota to the section of land described in section 3 of chapter 1257 of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890, be confirmed and made absolute in that State freed from the conditions therein imposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 11409) to authorize the construction of a traffic bridge across the Savannah River from the mainland within the corporate limits of the city of Savannah to Hutchinsons Island in the county of Chatham, State of Georgia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act and according to its limitations shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which also no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for transportation of said mails, troops, and munitions over the railroads and public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal, telegraph, and telephone purposes over said bridge; and all telephone and telegraph companies shall be granted equal rights and privileges in the construction and operation of their lines across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.
